Under the Travancore Penal Code as it stood amended by a Proclamation dated 11-11-1944, rigorous imprisonment for life was the only sentence that could have been passed against a person convicted of murder. But where a Magistrate convicts an accused for the offence of a murder after the extension of the Part B States (Laws) Act to the State of Travancore-Cochin, he ought to impose a sentence of death or of transportation for life under S. 302, I. P. C., and he is in error if he passes a sentence of rigorous imprisonment for life. 1954 Cri L J 1418 : 1954 Ker L T 54 : ILR (1953) Trav-Co 1062 : A I R 1954 Trav-Co 435 (436) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

——S. 302—Sentence.

Under S. 302 of the Indian Penal Code transportation for life is the lesser punishment prescribed for murder and not imprisonment for life as was the case under the Cochin and Travancore Penal Codes. Hence, once the lower court decides only to impose the lesser penalty prescribed the proper sentence to be passed is one of transportation for life and not rigorous imprisonment for life. 1953 Cri L J 1803 : AIR 1953 Trav-Co 561 (563) (Pt C) (Pr 11) (DB).

——S. 302 — Sentence — (Part B States (Laws) Act (1951), S. 6)—(Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act (1951), S. 25).

Courts in Travancore and Cochin are now competent to impose death sentence for the offence of murder. After the extension of Indian Penal Code and the Indian Criminal Procedure Code to that State, the Cochin Proclamation dated 26-11-1944 and the Travancore Proclamation dated 11-11-1944 which had abolished death sentence for murder no longer remain as good law. Section 6 of the Part B States (Laws) Act, 1951, replaced the Cochin and Travancore Penal Codes with their various amendments by the Indian Penal Code and under that Code the death penalty is the normal punishment for murder. The saving clause in S. 25 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 1951, does not retain the two proclamations in force. 1953 Ker L T 403 : 1953 Cri L J 1613 : I L R (1953) Trav-Co 514 : A I R 1953 Trav-Co 402 (408) (Pt F) (Pr 31) (DB).

——S. 302—Sentence.

A slap by V on the face of the accused resulted in a minor scuffle between the two. The deceased, an innocent by-stander, intervened with a mild admonition to the accused's adversary to stop fighting. The accused thereupon took a penknife from his waist and hit on the chest of the deceased and caused the injury which eventually killed the man.

Held, that the lesser sentence was called for because the slap on the face evidently made the accused, who appeared to be hot blooded man, lose control of himself. That would not afford justification for killing an innocent by-stander. But this was not the type of case in which the death sentence was called for. There was no premeditation and the knife was not ready in the hand but was drawn from the waist after the accused had been slapped and the quarrel between V and him had started. Narayan Nair v. ——S. 302—Sentence—Provocation — Details at the time of murder not proved — Accused held entitled to benefit of doubt in the matter of sentence.

On the previous night of the occurrence, the accused, who was a young man, had been threatened by the deceased, after a quarrel over the amount which the deceased owed to the accused. The next morning the deceased was murdered in his field by the accused with a lathi. The prosecution had not given any details of the incident at the time of murder. The accused had made a frank confession.

Held, that there was a possibility that there was a verbal quarrel at the time of the incident resulting in murder and there was some kind of provocation given to the accused on account of which he got annoyed and struck the deceased. In the absence of any details of the incident the accused was entitled to the benefit of doubt in the matter of sentence. 1959 All L J 866 : 1959 All W R (HC) 665 : 1960 All Cri R 12.

——S. 302—Sentence—Deceased first to start quarrel by abusing accused and slapping him — Lesser sentence held justified—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 367 (5).

Regarding the question of sentence to be passed in cases of murder it is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule of universal application. Each case must be decided on its own merits and punishment should be awarded suitable to each case. There can be no general rule defining the classes of cases in which lesser sentence can be imposed though from time to time certain circumstances have been recognised by the Judges as valid grounds for imposing such sentence. In the absence of any extenuating circumstances whatsoever, the sentence of death would be the appropriate sentence. The Court whose duty it is to award punishment must exercise its own discretion, but the discretion must be exercised judicially and not arbitrarily.

Where it was a casual meeting when the act of the 'noisy spitting' by the accused was taken by the deceased rightly or wrongly as an insult and he was the first to start the quarrel by abusing the accused in vulgar language and by slapping him on his cheek.

——S. 302 — Evidence — Burden of proof—Circumstantial evidence — Defence theory false — Effect—Benefit of doubt—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 367.

In a murder trial the fact that a foolish or false theory has been advanced on behalf of the accused, viz., of death having been caused by accidental fall, will not relieve the prosecution from the responsibility of proving conclusively that it was the accused and accused alone who did it.

When the evidence against the accused is entirely circumstantial, it must, in order to sustain a conviction, be such as to be wholly incompatible with the innocence of the accused and if there are circumstances to raise a doubt that the injury might have been caused by some one else, then the benefit of that doubt must be given to the accused. Even if the circumstances of the case create a strong suspicion that the accused might have been the assailant of the deceased it cannot take the place of proof and no conviction can be based on such suspicion. 4 Sau LR 159 (161, 164) (DB).

——S. 302 — Accused killing his wife who had eloped with a stranger in sense of frustration — Sentence of imprisonment for life, and not death would meet ends of justice—Murder—Punishment.

The panchayatidars also effected a dissolution approving as it were, the conduct of the wife to refuse to live with her husband and elope with a stranger. After the deed of dissolution of their marriage, when she was proceeding with her father, the accused who was returning home saw her and stabbed her to death.

Held, that the murder was not a premeditated one, but was committed by the accused in a sense of frustration, all of a sudden, when he was very much chagrined in mind that his wife eloped with a stranger and hence ends of justice would be amply met if the accused was sentenced to imprisonment for life, and not to death. ——S. 302 — Sentence — Accused recommended to Borstal School—Madras Borstal Schools Act, 1925 (5 of 1926), S. 10-A.

The accused was not a hardened criminal. He was a student of a College and was below 21 years at the time he was convicted of the offence of murder. He shot the deceased when he abused him and his father presumably when then they questioned him about his conduct in insulting his mother. The act was done by a young man of good antecedents in an emotional state Held, that S. 10-A of the Borstal Schools Act was really intended to govern the case of such accused. ——S. 302—Sentence—Deliberate and brutal murder—Youth—If extenuating circumstance.

In a murder case death sentence should ordinarily be imposed but the trial Judge has discretion to impose lesser punishment of life imprisonment for reasons which should be recorded by him. The reasons for passing the lesser sentence must be adequate. Where the accused is a young lad incapable of fully appreciating the serious consequences of a criminal act youth may be pleaded as an extenuating circumstance, but where the Court is dealing with a man of 28 years of age serving in Police Force who had deliberately brutally murdered a young man who was sleeping and was defenceless and had further tried to kill a mother of two children who was in a helpless state, there are no extenuating circumstances for awarding the lesser penalty. 1960 Cri L J 1208 : A I R 1960 J & K 116 (119) (Pt B) (Pr 8) (DB).

——S. 302—Sentence—Murder—Youth of accused—Effect.

While the age of the accused is always given due weight on the question of sentence when there is no extenuating circumstance, the murder was in cold blood, the accused had taken precaution, the victim was an innocent and defenceless young man of 25, the murder was committed in a running train when the passenger was all alone in the compartment—a matter causing general alarm to the travelling public eleven incised wounds were caused indicating that the passenger was butchered to an instantaneous death, so that there may not remain the last trace of life before the train reached the next station, such a heinous crime, which was committed with inhuman brutality, calls for no other than the extreme penalty provided in law. 1962 M P L J 1064 : 1962 Jab L J 876 : 1963 (1) Cri L J 433 : I L R (1963) Madh Pra 730 : A I R 1963 Madh Pra 106 (112) (Pt E) (Pr 25) (DB).

——S. 302—Sentence—Extenuating circumstances—Youth.

The fact that the accused immediately stabbed himself after the murderous assault cannot serve as an extenuating circumstance. Similarly, youth is not a circumstance that the Court can take into account in awarding the penalty for the offence of murder; that must be considered by the authorities of the State, in exercising their prerogative of mercy. 1960 Mad W N 538 : 1960 Cri L J 1340 : A I R 1960 Mad 443 (445) (Pt B) (Pr 12) (DB).

——S. 302—Sentence—Mitigation.

So long as law enjoins sentence of death to be the primary sentence, it is the business of the Court to impose it unless their appear mitigating circumstances or grounds for the exercise of judicial discretion in the matter. ——S. 302—Sentence—Considerations.

Age alone is not a factor to be considered in passing a lessor sentence than what is prescribed by law in the case of deliberate and premeditated murder of an aged man, manifestly for having rendered assistance in the investigation of crimes.

The possible distress in the family of the offender resultant on the execution of a legal sentence passed on him is not a matter which a Court of Law is expected to consider in passing the sentence prescribed by law. 1952 Cri L J 1424 : A I R 1952 Tripura 10 (10, 11) (Prs 5, 10, 11).

See Evidence Act (1872), S. 24. (1951-52) 10 J & K L R 162.

——S. 302—Conviction — Retracted confession — No corroboration - Effect.

Where the accused charged for offence under S. 302, Penal Code, had made a confession which he retracted even in the committal proceedings was convicted by the Sessions Court holding the confession to be true and where it was contended in the appeal by the accused that the conviction could be sustained if the Court believed the uncorroborated confession, even though retracted to be true:

Held, that the rule of prudence is that when a confession is retracted at the earliest opportunity the Court should require some corroboration of it in material particulars to convict the accused on that confession. (AIR 1950 Rajasthan 5 and 16, Ref.) Even though corroboration was possible by independent evidence nothing was adduced under the circumstances it is difficult to hold the confession is true. Hence the conviction has to be set aside. ——Ss. 302 and 84—Inability to prove motive — Plea of insanity.

The mere fact that the prosecution is unable to prove motive beyond any reasonable doubt is no reason for holding that there was no motive for it. Nor is the absence of motive any reason for holding that the plea of insanity has been established. ILR (1950) 2 Assam 423 : AIR 1951 Assam 79 (82) (Pt D) (Pr 12) (DB).

——S. 302—Sentence—Insanity, if ground for mitigation. Accused recently giving birth to a child jumping in a well with the child in the night—After hue and cry accused taken out of well but child dying by drowning — Accused charged with murder and attempt to commit sucide — Plea of somnambulism not substantiated — No expert examination or collection of evidence in light of medical knowledge of puerperal disorders—Specific defence not set up by accused —Held that court could not guess that it was a case of puerperal insanity constituting valid defence under S. 84—Conviction and sentence of imprisonment for life confirmed — Case recommended for reduction of imprisonment to six months. See Penal Code (1860), S. 84. 1959 Cri L J 724 : AIR 1959 Mad 239 (DB).

——Ss. 302 and 84—Murder—Accused charged with —Plea of unsoundness of mind set up — Burden lies heavily on him to prove unsoundness — He must prove that he was totally deprived of his understanding and memory — Held accused failed to discharge burden of proof.

Section 84 of the Penal Code and S. 105 read with S. 4 of the Evidence Act place a heavy burden on the defence before the offence can be excused. The effect of S. 4 of the Evidence Act interpreting the words "shall presume" is that the Court shall regard the absence of unsoundness of mind as proved, unless and until it is disproved. So long as the accused was not insane as to make it impossible for him to know the nature of the act or to realise that his act was wrong or contrary to law, he would be guilty of the offence committed by him. The evidence ought to be sufficient for a categorical finding that at the time when the accused committed the act he was of unsound mind to such an extent that he was incapable of knowing what he was doing was wrong or contrary to law.

Where a man is totally deprived of his understanding and memory, and does not know what he is doing, any more than a wild beast, he will properly be exempted from the punishment of the law.

Where the accused, a barber, gave with a razor three deep cuts on the throat of the deceased, who had been to the barber's shop to have a shave, sat on the dead body of the deceased and drew out some cords of the throat by his fingers and when charged with the offence of committing murder set up the plea of unsoundness of mind:

Held, that the circumstances on which the defence relied were innocuous, that the defence did not establish insanity or even probability of insanity, that the circumstances were consistent with the behaviour of a sane person and that, therefore, defence failed to discharge the burden of proof. ILR (1962) Cut 806 : 1963 (1) Cri L J 213 : 29 Cut L T 290 : AIR 1963 Orissa 33 (35, 36) (Pt A) (Prs 6, 10).

16. Nature of injury.

——S. 302—Sentence—Mitigation.

Held, that there were no extenuating circumstances which might justify the awarding of the lesser sentence provided under S. 302 in a case where the deceased was given deliberately a number of incised wounds with a sharp-edged weapon like a knife which entered the ribs causing rupture of the peritoneum and the abdominal cavity, entering into the stomach and the liver and the spleen making clear-cut injuries in them. ——Ss. 302, 304—Lathi blows—Death—Punishment.

A single lathi blow even on a vital part of the body has sometimes been held to be punishable only under S. 304, I. P. C. The reason is that a person giving a single blow may not be aware of the possibility of its resulting in death. But no such doubt can arise where two assailants simultanously attack an unresisting victim, and both belabour him with dozens of lathi blows some of which caused fracture of bones, the sheer quantity indicates that the assailants must have had the common intention of inflicting such injuries as were certain to result in death in normal course of events. Therefore the convictions of the accused under S. 302, I. P. C. and the sentences for life imprisonment are proper. 1962 Jab L J 901 : 1962 M P L J 352 : 1962 (2) Cri L J 682.

——S. 302 — Murder caused by injury — Absence of medical evidence — Presumption of lesser injury.

Absence of medical testimony as to the nature of the injuries in a case of murder need not necessarily lead the Court to presume the lesser kind of injury; for if the injury is such that the Court might itself think it to be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, even without medical testimony, then the accused can be convicted under S. 302. 52 Cri L J 207 : AIR 1951 Sau 17 (18) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 302 — Sentence — Mitigating circumstance — Absence of motive of the fact that accused did not run away after committing murder — Not mitigating circumstance.

Per Srivastava. J.— It is not always possible for the prosecution to suggest a motive for each crime that is committed. The absence of a motive may be a circumstance to be used in favour of the accused so far as the conviction is concerned. But if the commission of the offence is proved by satisfactory evidence no importance can be attached to the inability of the prosecution to suggest a motive for the crime. Absence of a motive cannot be used as a mitigating circumstance in connection with the measure of sentence to be imposed. AIR 1957 S C 614, Rel. on.

The circumstances that after attacking the deceased the accused did not run away but was sitting near the place of occurrence and did not resist his being taken to the thana do not also provide any grounds for extenuation for the purposes of sentence. 1963 (2)

Where it was as much the stubbornness of the deceased as the intransigence of the accused that led to a murder following a dispute between the brothers with regard to the division of their properties, lesser sentence of imprisonment for life would meet the ends of justice. ——S. 302—Sentence—Murder of unsuspecting and defenceless woman by head constable for gain — Death sentence passed by trial Court confirmed.

Held that there was no hesitation in confirming the sentence of death passed by trial Court. (1962) 2 Andh L T 393.

——S. 302—Sentence—Base motive—Aggravating circumstances — Tendency to award lesser sentence deprecated.

If an offender is actuated by a base motive in the commission of a murder, that does not go in mitigation of the crime. On the other hand, that is an aggravating circumstance. In such a case the proper sentence is death.

Tendency of some of the Sessions Judges to award lesser sentences to culprits who commit gruesome murders on the ground that the commission of murder was necessitated by their desire to commit theft or robbery and it was not a pre-planned murder, deprecated. ——Ss. 302 and 40 — Proof of motive—Necessity.

Motive is not an essential element to prove the guilt in a criminal case. It may strengthen the evidence on record. But adequacy or otherwise of the motive is of no consequence, for most of the grievous crimes are committed out of very flimsy and frivolous consideration. If there is positive evidence, want of motive or inadequacy thereof can have no bearing on the case. ——S. 302—Motive—Proof of, necessity.

Ordinarily when there is sufficient direct and circumstantial evidence connecting the accused with the commission of the offence the proof of motive becomes unimportant (There was held not sufficient motive for murder). ILR (1953) Hyd 32 : 1953 Cri L J 935 : AIR 1953 Hyd 161 (165) (Pt D) (Pr 19) (DB).

——S. 302—Motive.

Motive however strong is nothing more than a link in a chain of circumstances establishing the guilt of a person. At the same time mere non-establishment of motive would not be sufficient ground to order the acquittal of an accused 1954 Cri L J 1124 : AIR 1954 J & K 42 (43) (Pt B) (Pr 7) (DB).

●——S. 302 — Evidence of murder—Motive, how far relevant.

Where in a trial for murder there is direct evidence of a reliable character, no question of motive can arise. This is, of course, subject to the consideration that the absence of motive may throw doubt on the truth of the direct evidence but if making all allowances for it, the direct evidence can be trusted the question of motive presents little difficulty.

Hence, the mere fact that the motive alleged by the prosecution is inadequate is not in itself a ground for not convicting the accused. Satar Mir v. State, 10 J & K L R 155 : 1952 Cri L J 949 : AIR 1952 J & K 22 (23) (Pr 8) (FB).

——Ss. 302, 34 and 300—Applicability—A stabbing C with knife given by B—Both tried together—Acquittal of B—Effect on A's conviction—Applicability of maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus'—Sentence.

While B and C were sitting before a beedi shop, accused A came to the shop and asked C to get him a chew. On C's expressing inability, A's brother purchased for him the chew and B gave his knife to A for splitting arecanuts for the chew. A kept the knife after its use and after speaking something with B took C with him and stabbed C in abdomen within 10 feet of the shop. A and B were tried under S. 302 and S. 302 read with S. 34, I. P. Code respectively. B was acquitted but A was convicted and sentenced to death. It was contended in appeal that in view of B's acquittal, the maxim 'falsus in uno falsus in omnibus' applied and A should have been acquitted.

Held, that the maxim was not a rule of law of universal acceptance. It was only a rule of caution and not a mandatory rule of evidence. AIR 1957 SC 366, Rel. on. (2) that on a careful and anxious consideration of the prosecution evidence there was no doubt that A had stabbed C to death. (3) that in view of the absence of premeditation, lack of motive to murder, and the probability of some provocation before the actual stabbing the sentence of death was not the proper punishment. 1959 Ker L T 792 : 1959 Mad L J (Cri) 880 : 1959 Ker L J 1305 : ILR (1960) Ker 66 : 1960 Cri L J 594 : AIR 1960 Ker 149 (150, 151) (Prs 9 to 11) (DB).

——Ss. 302, 325—Absence of motive.

Absence of motive cannot be sufficient to quash the conviction when there is the direct testimony of the witnesses who had seen the accused committing the crime. Absence of motive is useful when the guilt of the accused is to be determined on circumstantial evidence, for, in such a case the evidence of motive is helpful in determining the probabilities of the case. But this is not so when there is overwhelming direct evidence corroborated by the subsequent conduct of the accused. 1956 Madh B L J 905 : Madh B L R 1956

——Ss. 302, 300, secondly — A stabbing his wife in lungs and intestine — Injuries resulting in death — A complaining about her illicit intimacy with his cousin—Offence is murder — That the deceased was on terms of illicit intimacy with A's cousin was only motive for murder and was no ground for awarding lesser punishment — It was for Government to consider whether it was a fit case for commuting death sentence to transportation for life. See Penal Code (1860), S. 300. 1956 Cri L J 1004: AIR 1956 Mad 425 (DB).

——S. 302 — Lesser penalty — Extenuating circumstances — Ordinarily for offence of murder death penalty is appropriate sentence. Only where adequete reasons exist that this rule should be departed from and lesser penalty awarded. For every murder there would be a motive but the Court cannot treat motive as an extenuating circumstance — Accused catching hold of deceased and pushing him to go along with him to village munsif's house — Deceased trying to escape from him—Accused taking out his knife and stabbing him in fit of passion—There is no extenuating circumstance. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 367 (5). AIR 1955 N U C (Mad) 5676 (DB).

——Ss. 302, 84 — Multiple murders — Accused not insane — No motive — Sentence — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 401, 367).

In cases of multiple murders where an accused is clearly not insane in the sense that he did not know what he was doing, and clearly knew what he was about, the mere absence of motive, the apparent senselessness of the murders and the fact that he murdered persons in his own family in cold blood can furnish no extenuating circumstances which the Courts can take into consideration in mitigation of the sentence. In such cases, Courts cannot take upon themselves the responsibility of recommending for a comparatively short period of imprisonment a man who has once been a victim to homicidal frenzy of this description and expose other innocent persons to a similar attack after his release from prison. In cases of this kind the law must take its course, and the only sentence that a criminal Court can pass is the extreme penalty. Case law reviewed. C., to Government). 1951 Mad W N Cr 262 : 1951 Mad W N 343 : 1951-2 Mad L J 593 : 1952 Cri L J 625 : AIR 1952 Mad 289 (291) (Pt A) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Ss. 302 and 323 — Evidence — Chain of circumstantial evidence is complete which leads to irresistible conclusion that accused was responsible for murder —Death of deceased by fatal injury—Proof of accused assaulting victim with first blows and kicks though infliction of the fatal injury not seen by eye-witness —Proof of facts and circumstances— Held, that facts and circumstances were only consistent with guilt of accused that he was author of the fatal injury and those were not consistent with any other rational explanation—Since motive for murder was shrouded with mystery, lesser sentence of imprisonment for life would meet ends of justice. (1964) 6 Orissa J D 257.

——S. 302—Evidence of motive.

There is no burden of proof on the prosecution to establish the existence of any motive. ILR (1962) Cut 806 : 29 Cut L J 290: 1963 (1) Cri L J 213 : AIR 1963 Orissa 33 (36) (Pt B) (Pr 13) (DB).

——S. 302—Motive—Absence of.

In a murder case it is not obligatory on the prosecution to prove adequate motive for the crime. At the same time the absence of an apparent motive on the part of the accused in committing a murder is material when the question of sentence is concerned. The failure of the prosecution to establish motive is not sufficient to disbelive eye-witnesses. AIR 1941 Mad 326, Ref. to. 1952 Cri L J 1213 : AIR 1952 Tripura 7 (8) (Pt B) (Pr 12).

19. Injuries to accused.

——S. 302 — Sentence — Court excluding portion relating to confession of offence and admitting in evidence only the complaint portion relating to assault on the accused — Accused not prejudiced by such admission of portion, which was wholly separable — Such portion held would enure for the benefit of the accused as an extenuating circumstance regarding sentence. 20. Attempt to suicide.

——S. 302—Sentence—Mitigation—Considerations.

The accused wanted to take his wife to his place, and when he did not succeed in his attempts he stabbed his wife having had a feeling of frustration. Immediately after he stabbed his wife he wanted to put an end to his own life:

Held, that this was not a case in which the extreme penalty of law should be imposed upon the accused. The ends of justice would be met by reducing it to life imprisonment. (1957) Mad L J (Cri) 460 : (1957) 2 Andh W R 187 : 1958 Cri L J 473 : AIR 1958 Andh Pra 203 (205) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

21. Family considerations.

——Ss. 302 and 326—Intention to kill — Inference—Throwing of acid on deceased—Offence — Sentence.

In law there is no difference between death being the result of a direct intention to kill and the result of a person wilfully doing an act of which death is a probable consequence. It is a well-established judicial rule that every one is presumed to contemplate the probable consequence of his own act. Throwing acid is likely to cause death and if the accused knowingly and intentionally throws corrosive acid on the deceased, then he obviously intends to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death.

Accused was charged under S. 302, Penal Code, for causing the death of two females by throwing acid upon them in the dead of night when they were sleeping. The evidence clearly indicated that the accused had motive to take serious revenge against the deceased and had contemplated, prior to the date of the incident, using another deceased as a cats' paw to put the deceased out of her way and it was not a sudden act committed at the spur of the moment or in the heat of passion, was a pre-planned and carefully executed act. It was contended that the accused could not be said to have intended to cause the death of the deceased. It was further contended that throwing of acid could not be said to be an act which was likely to cause death since the punishment for throwing acid was provided under S. 326 of the Penal Code.

Held (1) that under the circumstances the intention of the accused was not to cause such injuries as would cause some pain or disfiguration. Although S. 320 provided for injury by corrosive substances, the nature of the corrosive substance and the quantity of it and the result following from it have always to be the determining factors in finding out whether or not it could be said that the act complained of in a particular case was likely to cause death. The accused having knowingly and intentionally thrown corrosive acid on the deceased, obviously intended to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death and was rightly convicted under S. 302.

(In view of the fact that the accused belonged to a respectable family and also had given birth to an infant six months back, the High Court altered the sentence from death to one of for life). ILR (1858) 2 All 888.

——S. 302 — Sentence — Accused having 8 children suspecting his wife's illicit connection with his own brother and killing her — Accused if sentenced to death at least his 7 children would be rendered orphans—Held extreme penalty of law was not called for and the ends of justice would be met if he was sentenced to imprisonment for life. (1965) (2) Cri L J 765 : AIR 1965 Him Pra 62 (71) (Pt C) (Pr 25).

24. Lapse of time.

The sentence of death substituted by the sentence of transportation for life, having regard to the time that has elapsed since the occurrence and the probable motive of provocation of cruelty to a helpless woman. Kalawati v. State of H. P. 1953 S C J 144 ; 1953 Mad W N 219 ; 1953 Cri L J 185 ; 1953 All W R (Sup) 52 ; 1953 S C R 546 ; AIR 1953 S C 131 (135) (Pt E) (Pr 23).

——S. 302—Sentence—Extenuating circumstances—Inordinate delay in trial — Murderer absconding for number of years — Not a valid ground for reducing sentence—Brutal murder—Accused being of advance age having his wife and children living — Lesser penalty imposed.

The Court has power and no doubt must consider, where there has been inordinate delay, to allow the appeal so far as the death sentence is concerned, and substitute a sentence for imprisonment for life on account of the time factor alone. But in a case of murder in which the extreme penalty of law is called for, the circumstances that the murderer absconded for a number of years before he was brought to trial is not by itself a ground for reducing the sentence of death to one for life imprisonment.

The fact that the prosecution failed to prove any motive for the murderous assault and that the accused is of advanced age having his wife and children living, constitute an extenuation of an offence.

Held, that in the circumstances of the case the death sentence should be commuted to a sentence of imprisonment for life. 1962 (2) Cri L J 178 : AIR 1962 Cal 433 (438, 437) (Pt B) (Prs 33 to 37, 39) (DB).

28. Weapon used.

——Ss. 302, 326—Weapon not proved to be deadly — Act done in a melee.

Where a person hit is a young man of 26 years, the stick with which the blow is dealt is not proved to be deadly and it is neither seized nor produced, there is no evidence about the nature of the blow except that to be gathered from the inquiry and contributory causes, if any, for the immediate death are not elicited, it is rather unsafe to impute the consequences of the intention to the person that dealt the blow. Further, if the act has been done suddenly in a melee where the accused could not have intended the death of the person dealt with the conviction should be under S. 326 and not under S. 302. (1951) 55 Mys H C R 317 (DB).

——S. 302—Sentence—Extenuating circumstances—Body not found—Youth of accused.

The murderers having been found, the mere circumstance that the body of the unfortunate victim had been effectively made away with by the convicts should not influence the Court in the passing the sentence of death.

Held, that inexperience and youth of the accused taken with other circumstances of the case justified the passing of the lesser sentence. 1958 Cri L J 842 : AIR 1958 All 514 (521) (Pt F) (Fr 41) (DB).

——S. 302—Evidence and proof— Discovery or identification of dead body if absolutely essential.

Though proof of death of the deceased is the initial condition to be satisfied for rendering the accused guilty of murder it is not imperatively essential, in order to justify a conviction for murder, that the 'corpus delicti' should be forthcoming. To recognize any such condition precedent, as being absolutely necessary to conviction in all cases, would be to afford complete immunity and certain escape to those murderers who are cunning or clever to make away with or destroy the bodies of their victims. Hence the mere circumstance that the body of the deceased has not been or could not be identified due to mutilation is a most inadequate reason upon which to refuse to convict accused of murder. ILR 3 All 383, Ref. (1950) 55 Mys H C R 48 (DB).

——S. 302—Conviction—Dead body not found—Fact of killing proved—Confession of accused retracted—Evidence of accessory after the fact — Corroboration —(S. 24, Evidence Act).

B was charged for murder. He had confessed to a Magistrate admitting the killing. The clothes of the deceased worn at the time of his death were recovered at his instance. Circumstantial evidence also was in favour of his guilt. M the wife of the deceased who was with her husband at that time, was living with B, shortly after, her evidence of killing was also on record. She was found to have had illicit relations with B before and after. B's statement before the trial Court was that it was M who killed the deceased and she came to him after the event and lived with him. On appeal against conviction.

Held. Where there is the confession of the accused, and his statement before Court that the man was killed and there was also other evidence to show the deceased was killed the fact that the body was not recovered is not a material ground for not convicting him under S. 302 and the contention that he could only be convicted under S. 307, cannot be accepted. The mere fact that the accused was not taken into judicial custody but handed back to the police does not affect the value of the confession of the accused. The confession though retracted at the trial can be relied on if there is corroboration. Retracted confession may be used as corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice so far as the maker of the confession is concerned. 1952 Raj L W 376 : 1953 Cri L J 1038 : I L R (1952) 2 Raj 669 : AIR 1953 Raj 131 (133) (Pt D) (Pr 7) (DB).

The fact that one of the accused was not related to the deceased in any way and he did not stand to gain by the murder of the deceased but took part in the murder simply to oblige the other accused who was his very thick friend is wholly an inadequate reason for imposing sentence of transportation for life. ● ——Ss. 302, 34, 96 and 103 — Murder committed in furtherance of common intention—Accused establishing right of private defence under S. 103 cannot be held liable for murder— Otherwise they would be liable for that offence.

Where several accused commit the murder of a person by doing an act or acts in furtherance of common intention they would not be liable for the said act or acts done in furtherance of the common intention only if they are able to establish that they had the right of private defence to voluntarily cause the death of the person. Under S. 103, the right of private defence of property extends, under the restrictions mentioned in S. 99 thereof, to the voluntarily causing of death, if the offence, the committing of which or attempting to commit which occasions the exercise of the right, falls in one of the categories mentioned therein. Hence all the accused would be liable for murder if they are not able to establish that the offence which made them voluntarily cause death fell in one of the categories enumerated in the section as all of them participated in the offence pursuant to the common intention to murder.

It is well settled that S. 34 does not create a distinct offence; it only lays down the principle of joint criminal liability. The necessary conditions for the application of S. 34 of the Code are common intention to commit an offence and participation by all the accused to doing an act or acts in furtherance of that common intention. If these two ingredients are established, all the accused would be liable for the said offence; that is to say, if two or more persons had common intention to commit murder and they had participated in the acts done by them in furtherance of that common intention, all of them would be guilty of murder. In that situation S. 96 of the Code says that nothing is an offence which is done in the exercise of the right of private defence. Common intention, therefore, has relevance to the offence and not to the right of private defence. What would be an offence by reason of constructive liability would cease to be one if the act constituting the offence was done in exercise of the right of private defence. Once it is established that the common intention was to commit murder, the question of separate individual liability in the context of private defence would be out of place.

It is true that in ascertaining whether a group of persons had common intention to murder, the evidence adduced by the defence that they had common intention only to cause hurt is relevant. But in most of the cases, the discussion of the evidence in compartments —one relating to the offence and the other to the right of private defence— may not be possible, for almost the evidence relating to one part will have impact on the other part, and the Court in considering whether the accused are liable constructively for murder will have to consider also the evidence of the defence that their common intention was not to commit murder but only to protect their right and to cause hurt, if necessary. ■——Ss. 302 and 149 — Sentence — Murder committed by some members of unlawful assembly — Death sentence on every member — Propriety of.

As a mere proposition of law, it would be difficult to accept the argument that the sentence of death can be legitimately imposed only where an accused person is found to have committed the murder himself. Whether or not sentences of death should be imposed on persons who are found to be guilty not because they themselves committed the murder, but because they were members of an unlawful assembly and the offence of murder was committed by one or more of the members of such an assembly, in pursuance of the common object of that assembly, is a matter which has to be decided on the facts and circumstances of each case. ■——Ss. 302, 149 and 34—Prosecution of more persons than one — Acquittal of some — Effect on prosecution of remaining.

If out of six persons charged under S. 149 of the Penal Code, along with other offences, two persons are acquitted, the remaining four may not be convicted because the essential requirement of an unlawful assembly might be lacking. Where however four persons are prosecuted under S. 302 read with S. 34, Penal Code, failure of the prosecution to prove that one of them took part in the commission of the offence does not introduce any infirmity in its case against the remaining accused at all. Even if he is held not to be present at the scene of the offence, that in law, cannot prevent the prosecution from presenting its case against the remaining accused if the evidence adduced by it is otherwise satisfactory and cogent : (1902) 2 K B 339, Disting. ■——Ss. 302 and 149 — Seven accused charged under S. 302 read with S. 149 — Five acquitted in appeal — Conviction of two under Ss. 302 and 149.

The two appellants were charged and convicted along with five others of having constituted an unlawful assembly and committed murder (S. 302 read with S. 149). But in the appeal before the High Court the five accused were given benefit of doubt and acquitted. In an appeal before the Supreme Court it was contended that the said five accused having been acquitted, and in the absence of a charge that five other unknown persons constituted an unlawful assembly, the two appellants could not be held members of the unlawful assembly which had the common object.

Held, after reviewing the evidence and weighing the opinion embodied in the judgment of the High Court that there was no scope left for introducing into the case the theory of the benefit of doubt, that the five accused were wrongfully acquitted and that though their acquittal stood that circumstance could not affect the conviction of the two appellants under S. 302 read with S. 149. ——Ss. 302 and 149—Sentence—Murder committed by several accused — Who inflicted fatal injury not known — Ground if sufficient for awarding lesser sentence to all accused.

Where a number of accused persons are found guilty of the offence under Ss. 302 and 149, the trial Judge can award sentence of death to all the accused persons or to only a few depending upon the facts and circumstances of the case. He should not, in each and every case, be unduly moved by the factor that it was not known who had inflicted the fatal injury or caused injuries which by themselves would have been sufficient to cause death as penalty when the accused persons have acted brutally in committing a pre-planned murder. What is necessary is that there should be no discrimination and all the accused persons equally placed be awarded the same sentence: AIR 1956 S C 754, Foll. ; AIR 1953 S C 364, Rel. on. 1964 (2) Cri L J 75 (All.).

——Ss. 302 and 149—Attack by persons armed with deadly weapons — Death caused — Offence.

Where a number of persons go armed with deadly weapons to attack a person or a party, it may be assumed as a matter of commonsense that their common intention is at least to cause grievous hurt. If in the course of the commission of that offence, death is caused, the persons so attacking will be guilty of an offence under S. 302 read with S. 149. Conviction under S. 304 or S. 323 read with S. 149, is erroneous. 1950 All L J 871 : 1952 Cri L J 738 : ILR (1953) 1 All 1 : AIR 1951 All 365 (366, 368) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 15) (DB).

——Ss. 302 and 149—Group of persons, found guilty of murder—Who inflicted what blows not established — Lesser punishment, if warranted — Discretion — Accused drunk — Extenuating circumstances.

A combined reading of the provisions of S. 302, Indian Penal Code and S. 367 (5), Criminal P. C. makes it clear that the normal punishment in the case of murder is death, but a mitigated punishment can be given for stated extenuating circumstances. When the statutes laid down in express terms that reasons shall be given for a lesser sentence, it presupposed that the normal sentence for murder is death. The section, therefore, does not confer an absolute discretion in the Court to give one or the other of the alternative sentences. The normal sentence is indicated and the lesser can only be given for definite extenuating circumstances : AIR 1953 All 220, Not followed.

It cannot be laid down as a rule of law that in every case where it is not possible to allocate the wounds inflicted to a particular accused, a lesser penalty should be given. Where a group of persons brutally murdered the deceased, they all deserve the same punishment. But there may be cases where part taken by each of the accused may vary, one of the accused taking a part and other taking a subsidiary part, though their common object is to commit murder. In such a case, perhaps, there may be a good ground for differentiating the accused for inflicting punishment.

Where it was found that all the accused who were guilty of murder, were in the habit of manufacturing illicit toddy and were drunk as usual when they committed the murder, but had not primed themselves with drink for the purpose of committing the murder, it was held that this was sufficient extenuating circumstance for awarding the lesser punishment of transportation for life. 1954 Andh L J (H C) 88 : 1955 Cri L J 81 : 1955 Andh W R 183 : AIR 1954 Andhra 46 (49, 50) (Pt B) (Prs 16, 18) (DB).

——S. 302—Murder charge against several persons—Death as a result of sudden fight — Flimsy evidence about part played by particular accused — Unsafe to found a conviction on such evidence.

Where in an unpremeditated sudden fight between two groups two persons were alleged to have darted arrows at one of the deceased persons and killed him and only one incised wound was found on the dead body, the court acquitted one accused but convicted the other. In conviction appeal by the other accused:

Held, that though in a sudden fight between two groups it is easy for witnesses to observe as to who was discharging the arrows, but it is extremely difficult to observe as to what portion of the dead body particular person's arrows struck and therefore it is unsafe to found a conviction on such flimsy evidence against a particular accused, especially when one of the two persons who were alleged to have darted the arrows is acquitted on the same evidence. 1956 M B L R (Cri) 204 : 1956 Madh B L J 900.

——Ss. 302 and 34 — Sentence — Murder by several accused — Common intention to kill—Conviction of all under S. 302 read with S. 34 — No distinction to be made in matter of sentence.

Several accused were charged under S. 302 read with S. 34 for having committed murder of two persons. The Sessions Judge while finding the accused guilty under S. 302 read with S. 34 awarded the sentence of death to three of them as they were armed with deadly weapons. The other two were sentenced to imprisonment for life.

Held, that no distinction in sentence could be made on the ground that some of them were armed with deadly weapons. If two of them were awarded the lesser punishment of imprisonment for life, there was equally good reason that the other should have been awarded the same penalty. ——Ss. 302 and 149 — Conviction under — Lesser sentence than life imprisonment is illegal.

Conviction under S. 302 read with S. 149 does not stand on a different footing from that under S. 302 simpliciter, and it is not legally permissible to impose lesser sentences of punishment on persons convicted by force of that section than the minimum sentence of life imprisonment provided for the substantive offence under S. 302. Once the conditions of S. 149 are fulfilled, and a person is held guilty of the offence of murder under S. 302 read with S. 149 then the only lawful punishment which can be imposed on such an offender would be the one provided under S. 302, itself and the minimum punishment provided thereunder is imprisonment for life and no less. 1962 Raj L W 448 : ILR (1962) 12 Raj 383.

28. Acquittal of some accused.

——S. 302 — Lesser punishment — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 367, 402).

The fact that the principal instigator has been acquitted, is not a proper case to act under S. 402, Criminal P. C. This would not be an extenuating circumstance. But in view of the fact that these accused who were young men had come under the influence of the older man, viz., Bhima Pillai, and would have committed this offence but for that baneful influence upon them, the ends of justice do not require that the High Court must confirm the extreme penalty of law awarded to them. The sentences were reduced to imprisonment for life. 1956 Cri L J 1202: 1956 Mad W N 327 : 69 Mad L W 788 : 1956 All W R (Supp) 114 : (1956) 2 Mad L J 43 : AIR 1956 Mad 536 (540) (Pt G) (Pr 24) (DB).

29. Leniency to some accused.

■ ——Ss. 302, 149 — Sentence — Leniency to some accused if ground for reducing sentence of death as regards others.

Where the High Court, while upholding the conviction of the appellants under S. 302/149, Penal Code, reduced the sentence of death of some of the accused to transportation for life, but did not reduce the sentence of death passed on the appellant B :

Held (by the Supreme Court in appeal) that merely because leniency had been shown to some of the appellants in the matter of sentence was no ground for reducing the sentence, passed on B, who was shown to be responsible for the killing. 30. Abetment.

——Ss. 302 and 109 — Death penalty on principal offender — No ground for any differentiation between him and his abettor — Normal sentence of death has to be passed against him also — Even if his acquittal by the trial Court and difference of opinion as to his guilt between the Judges of the Division Bench might weigh the Executive Government to commute death sentence, if passed, that cannot influence the Court to pass the lesser sentence. Besides to impose the lesser penalty would be to deprive accused of the benefit of an appeal which he would of right get under Art. 134 (1) (a) of the Constitution in case he is condemned to death. 34. Sentence of fine.

—S. 302 — Longest term of imprisonment awarded — Desirability of sentence of fine — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 32).

It is highly undesirable that where the longest term of imprisonment is awarded to an accused person, this punishment should be supplemented by an additional sentence of fine. 1960 Cri L J 437 : 1960 All L J 136 : ILR (1959) 2 All 255 : AIR 1960 All 223 (227) (Pt D) (Pr 18) (DB).

—S. 302 — Sentence — Substantive sentence and fine — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 32).

The Penal Code sanctions either a term of imprisonment or a fine or both and it is left to the discretion of the Court whether to inflict a sentence of imprisonment or fine or both. It is only in very exceptional cases that it is suitable and appropriate to inflict a fine as well as substantive term of imprisonment. It is only suitable in cases where the Court thinks that the justice of the case will be met by inflicting a substantial fine but at the same time thinks that a short term of imprisonment in addition will serve as a salutary lesson to the accused or in cases where it is desired to compensate the complainant, or in cases where the accused had profited financially by his misdeeds. The Court should exercise a careful discretion in the matter of superimposing fines upon long substantive terms of imprisonment. It would not be proper to add to a very long term of substantive imprisonment a fine which there is no reasonable prospect of the accused person being able to pay, and for default in payment of which he will have to undergo a still further term of imprisonment. 1957 Cri L J 1205 : AIR 1957 All 764 (764) (Pr 5) (DB).

—S. 302 — Sentence of fine with transportation for life — When to be awarded — Reasons to be given.

The Penal Code confers a discretion on the Court to sentence an accused as it thinks proper. When a Court imposes a sentence of fine also under S. 302, Penal Code, then obviously the Court has got to give reasons why a sentence of fine also was being imposed, for the simple reason that a sentence of fine over and above the substantive sentence is deemed to be in excess thereof. A sentence of fine in a murder case looks appropriate only where the murder has been motivated by monetary gain. Murder held was not motivated by monetary gain and the sentence of fine was set aside. AIR 1956 Bom 711, Rel. on. 1958 All W R (HC) 5 : 1957 Cri L J 498 : 1958 All Cr R 5 : ILR (1957) 1 All 43 : AIR 1957 All 317 (319) (Pt C) (Pr 11) (DB).

Where, therefore, in prosecution of accused for murder of his father and wife the disinterested witnesses testified that the accused was oppressed by the feeling that his own father had sullied the honour of his wife, that was a case not without extenuating circumstance. 36. Interference by High Court.

■ —S. 302—Sentence.

In a murder case death sentence should ordinarily be imposed. But the trial Judge has the discretion to impose the lesser punishment of transportation for reasons recorded by him and when those reasons are such that a judicial mind could properly find on them the appellate Court could not interfere with that discretion. There must be strong reasons to entitle the appellate Court to enhance the sentence of death and it is not enough if the appellate Court feels that left to itself it would have awarded the greater penalty of death.

Conviction for murder in which no one of the accused is convicted for his own but is being held vicariously liable for the act of another or others — When facts are fully known as to amongst the accused who inflicted the fatal blows it is a sound exercise of judicial discretion to discriminate in punishment —When otherwise and the Judge decides to award the lesser punishment to all the accused that is also exercise of sound judicial discretion. Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab, 1953 S C A 709 : 1953 Mad W N 642 : 1954 S C R 145 : (1953) S C J 532 : 1953 Cri L J 1465 : A I R 1953 S C 364 (367, 368) (Pt G) (Prs 39, 40).

——S. 302 — Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 439 (1), 367 (5) (a) (amended in 1955) — Effect of amendment— Enhancement of sentence—Trial Judge in awarding lesser sentence proceeding on wrong assumption of law — High Court will not enhance sentence even though it is of opinion that sentence of death could be awarded.

Prior to the repeal of the old S. 367 (5), Criminal P. C., in 1955 the sentence of death was a normal penalty for murder and imprisonment for life an exception for the award of which reasons had to be given; but since after the amendment of the Criminal P. C., the Sessions Judge is at liberty to award either of the two sentences, as he may consider appropriate. The sentences provided for the offences of murder, dacoity with murder, etc., now stand in the same category as sentences provided for other criminal offences and the trial Judge can award any of the punishments so provided and whatever punisbment is awarded shall be deemed to be in the exercise of his judicial discretion. The enhancement of the sentence from imprisonment for life to death shall, therefore, be governed by the same principles as are applicable to enhancement of sentence for other offences.

The award of sentence is discretionary and the discretion exercised by the trial Judge can be interfered with in appeal only if it was improperly exercised, i.e., not in accordance with the well-established principles. Further, the appellate Court shall not be justified to interfere with the sentence awarded simply because, as a trial Court, it would have awarded a higher sentence. Enhancement of sentence is thus possible only if the trial Judge had acted arbitrarily and did not follow the rules applicable to the award of sentence. Where the trial Judge has proceeded on a wrong assumption of law that in case a murder is committed by several accused persons and it is not known who inflicted the fatal injury, all the accused should be awarded the lesser sentence, the High Court will not be justified in enhancing the sentences of some of them, even though, it is of the opinion that those accused persons could be awarded the sentence of death. 1964 (2) Cri L J 75 (All).

F.I.R. was by the accused; it was a confessional statement reciting how he committed crime and why. His bloodstained dhoti was seized by the Sub-Inspector, he was taken to his house where the wife was lying dead in a room upstairs. An inquest was held and the report was prepared there and then. Several stab-wounds were found on her body and fresh blood on the floor. The sheath of a dagger was found near the head of the dead body. P. W. 1 produced a dagger, blood-stained. The articles were seized and the clothes of the deceased were also taken and sent along with the dhoti for examination by the chemical examiner.

The accused was in custody for 3 days and on the morning of the fourth day at 7 a. m. was produced before the Magistrate who took him in Court custody. He was brought before the Magistrate at 11 a. m. and his confession was recorded.

No eye-witnesses spoke to the committing of the crime and the accused was convicted on the confession made by him retracted at the trial and the circumstantial evidence in the case.

Held, 1. In view of the fact that the accused was throughout represented by a pleader and no list attempted to be filed and no application presented under S. 292 of the Code as also the fact that the evidence in the case was merely circumstantial the non-compliance with the provisions of S. 211 and S. 289 (1) of the Criminal P. C. was a mere irregularity in the proceedings covered by S. 537 of the Code, and the trial was not vitiated when it had not occasioned a failure of justice. There was no grievance made of it even in the grounds of appeal.

2. The entire first information report (F.I.R.) made by an accused to the police could not be held to be inadmissible in evidence under S. 25 of the Evidence Act when it contained a confession also. (AIR 1917 P C 25, Rel.; A I R 1921 C 111, Foll.; A I R 1939 P C 47, Ref.; AIR 1918 L 89; AIR 1935 Bom 26; AIR 1940 Pat 163, Not foll.) Portions of the report giving the motive, the state of the deceased at the time of the report and the dagger stated to be lying by her were admissible.

3. Where the Magistrate before recording the confession gave the required warning and told the accused that there was no police pressure and inducement on him to make the confession and also asked if he was making the confession voluntarily the confession so recorded is admissible and cannot be ruled out for the breach of S. 164 (3) of the Code. (AIR 1940 Pat 163, Dist.). The giving of the warning that the accused was free to depose what he liked instead of in the negative form did not matter. In view of S. 29 of the Evidence Act it is relevant and admissible. AIR 1932 Mad 431; AIR 1938 All 625 and AIR 1941 All 145, Foll.

4. Although it is necessary that the Chemical Examiner should furnish the grounds of his opinion in his report when it has been admitted at the trial without any objections or a request made for his examination in Court it cannot be ruled out on objection in the appeal. AIR 1934 All 873 and AIR 1933 All 837, Rel. on.

5. It is the duty of the Sessions Judge to examine the accused under S. 342 of the Code in detail and to put to him all the circumstances appearing against him. Merely reading over his statement before the Magistrate's Court, committing him, and asking him if he made it and also if he had anything more to say is most unsatisfactory; but it is curable under S. 537, Criminal P. C. 1952 Raj L W 269 : I L R (1962) 2 Raj 93.

●——Ss. 303, 34, 149 and 302 — Applicability and scope of S. 303 — Person undergoing sentence of imprisonment for life—Conviction under S. 302 read with S. 34—Sentence of death can be imposed upon him — Fact that he himself did not commit murder will not save him from effect of S. 34 — Scope and effect of Ss. 34 and 149 explained.

Section 303 cannot be confined only to cases where a person undergoing sentence of imprisonment for life actually and in fact himself commits an act which results in the death of the victim. The said section would apply even in cases where such a person is convicted either under S. 302 read with S. 34 or under S. 302 read with S. 149. Section 34 embodies the ordinary commonsense principle that if two or more persons intentionally commit an offence jointly in substance, it is just the same as if each one of them had committed that offence. Common intention which is the basis of the principle laid down by S. 34 implies action in concert and that in its turn postulates the existence of a pre-arranged plan. Therefore, if two or more persons acting in concert in pursuance of a pre-arranged plan proceed to commit an offence, S. 34 steps in and provides that for the act committed by one the other is liable in the same manner as if it had been done by him alone.

The position would not be any different even if the accused had been convicted under S. 332/149. It is true that the basis of constructive liability imposed by S. 149 is mere membership of the unlawful assembly, whereas the basis of the constructive liability contemplated by S. 34 is participation in the same action with the common intention of committing a crime. That, however, does not make any difference in the legal position. Mahabir Gope v. ——S. 304—Applicability—Section 304 will apply to the following classes of cases:—

(i) When the case falls under one or the other of the clauses of section 300 but it is covered by the exceptions to that section, (ii) when the injury caused is not of the higher degree of likelihood which is covered by the expression "sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death" but is of a lower degree of likelihood which is generally spoken of as an injury "likely to cause death" and the case does not fall under clause (2) of section 300.

(iii) When the act is done with the knowledge that death is likely to ensue but there is no intention to cause death or an injury likely to cause death. In such cases there may be either no intention to cause any injury at all, or there may be an intention to cause simple or grievous hurt but not an injury likely to cause death. 1952 All L J 546 : 1953 All W R (HC) 63 : 1953 Cri L J 565 : ILR (1953) 2 All 885 : AIR 1953 All 203 (207) (Pt B) (Pr 23) (DB).

ILR (1962) Andh Pra 313.

——Ss. 304, Part 2, 299 — Applicability—Case not falling within any exception to S. 300 — Second part of S. 304—Application of.

Section 304, Penal Code divides the offence of culpable homicide into two degrees of guilt, the graver of which depends on the intention proved or to be inferred from all the circumstances and the less serious of which does not depend on intention at all. But though the absence or presence of intention is not criterion to be adopted in deciding on which side of the line an offence under S. 304 falls, there are cases in which there is an intention which makes the offence the graver offence of culpable homicide but which would yet fall short of the intention requisite to satisfy S. 300. Cases coming under the last part of S. 299 are either cases under Part II, or else they fall prima facie under S. 300. In that class of cases recourse cannot be had directly to the first part of S. 304 unless it is a prima facie case of murder to which some exception applies. The Code nowhere says that an act done with the intention to inflict bodily injury likely to cause death is prima facie murder. On the contrary, S. 299 expressly describes it as culpable homicide and S. 300 does not deal with it at all.

Where the evidence did not disclose that there was any intention to cause death of the deceased but it was clear that the accused had the knowledge that their acts were likely to cause death the accused can be held guilty under the second part of S. 304, I. P. Code. 1960 Cr L J 303 : (1960) 1 Andh W R 313 : 1960 Mad L J (Cri) 265 : AIR 1960 Andh Pra 141 (144) (Pt C) (Prs 14, 15) (DB).

——S. 304, Parts 1 and 2 and S. 323 — Distinction between Part I and Part II of S 304—Injury to solar plexus by hitting at it — Death caused by injury—Offence committed is one not under S. 304 but one under S. 323.

When a bodily injury as is likely to cause death is intentionally caused and results in the death of the victim, the case will fall under Part I and not under Part II of S. 304, Penal Code. Part II comes into play when death is caused by doing an act with knowledge that it is likely to cause death and, when such act is the infliction of bodily injury the infliction must not be intentional. A person who intentionally causes bodily injury with knowledge that such act is likely to cause death must necessarily be a person who does as act with intent to cause bodily injury likely to result in death. AIR 1953 All 189 and 203, Rel. on.

The finding of the trial Court that the act by which death was caused was known by the accused to be likely to cause death involves the following findings : (1) that the accused had intentionally inflicted first blows and kicks inter alia in the abdominal region, (2) that the cause of death was injury to solar plexus and (3) that the accused knew that injury to solar plexus was likely to cause death. The aforesaid findings bring the case under the first part of S. 304, Penal Code.

It is a little difficult to hold that the accused knew that a first blow or a kick at that delicate part was likely to result in death. It cannot, therefore, be held that the act by which the death of the deceased was caused was known to the accused to be such as was likely to cause death or that it was committed with intent to cause bodily injury likely to cause death. The case, therefore, is not covered by either the first or the second part of S. 304, Penal Code.

Held, that the accused had voluntarily caused hurt and was guilty of an offence under S. 323, Penal Code. 1963 (1) Cri L J 762 : A I R 1963 Him-Pra 18 (20, 21) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 10, 15, 21).

——Ss. 304, Part 1, 300 'thirdly' and S. 299 — Medical opinion not definite and consistent that the injury caused by accused which resulted in death was necessarily sufficient to cause death in ordinary course of nature — It was more consistent with the circumstances of the case and medical opinion that the injury was likely to cause death—Held, that the injury causing death was not within scope of thirdly of S. 300 but was one under second part of S. 299 and hence offence committed was one under Part I of S. 304.

The circumstances of the case established that the deceased appeared unexpectedly during the incident and it was when he caught the kirpan of J that the accused S gave him a spear thrust which resulted in his death. It was more of a sudden act probably in defence of J whose weapon had been caught hold of by the deceased and S might have anticipated that on the weapon being taken away J might be attacked and this apprehension led him to give the blow. Medical opinion was not definite and consistent that the injury was necessarily sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. It was more consistent with the circumstances of the case, and medical opinion, that it was likely to cause death.

Held, that the injury which resulted in the death of the deceased was not within the scope of 'thirdly' of S. 300 but as one under second part of S. 299 and hence the offence committed by S was one under Part 1 of S. 304, I. P. C.

It is settled law that second part of S. 299 corresponds to 'secondly' and 'thirdly' of S. 300. If the injury caused is no more than an injury likely to cause death, then it is an injury under second part of S. 299 but if, in addition, it is either proved that the offender had the knowledge that the injury was likely to cause death, the case becomes more serious and comes under 'secondly' of S. 300, or the injury is proved to be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, even then the offence is more serious and falls under 'thirdly' of S 300. If the offence does not come under 'secondly' or 'thirdly' of S. 300, but falls under second part of S. 299, then the offence is culpable homicide not amounting to murder coming under Part I of S. 304. No doubt the accused intended to cause the injury on the body of the deceased and the doctor also found the injury to have proved fatal but he was not consistent in his opinion that it was necessarily sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death because another part of his opinion shows that it was a type of injury that was likely to cause death. Therefore, on the facts of the case and on the medical opinion, the conclusion cannot be arrived at that the injury was sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature and even in this matter the accused is entitled to the benefit of doubt and the only safe conclusion would be that it was likely to cause death. In a matter of doubt between these two conclusions, the lesser and the one favourable to the accused should prevail. 1965 Cur L J 730 : 67 Punj L R 1204.

● —Ss. 304, Part 2, 299, 34, 35, 37, 38—Conviction under S. 304, Part 2, read with S. 34—Legality — Several offenders by diverse acts and with prior concert chasing the deceased, throwing him to the ground and beating him to death—Conviction of all offenders under S. 304, Part 2, read with S. 34 is legal notwithstanding that S. 304, Part 2 speaks only of knowledge, while S. 34 deals with common intention—Knowledge of death being likely consequence of criminal act of beating, attributable fo each offender, attracts S. 34—S. 304, Part 2 cannot be divorced from common intention.

A conviction under S. 304, Part 2, read with S. 34 is legal and valid. Part 2 of S. 304 can be read together with S. 34, notwithstanding that Part 2 of S. 304 speaks only of knowledge while S. 34 deals with common intention. Minority decision of Das, J. in AIR 1944 Cal 339 (FB), Disapproved; AIR 1950 Peshawar 24, Diss. from. AIR 1951 All 21 (FB), Overruling AIR 1943 All 271), Approved.

Where the deceased went to a particular place for a peaceful purpose and immediately after his arrival there, he was chased by two of the accused and caught and felled to the ground and after this the remaining four accused appeared, and beat the deceased with diverse weapons, while those who were not armed held him pinned to the ground, the conviction of all the six accused for culpable homicide not amounting to murder in furtherance of a common intention under S. 304, Part 2, read with S. 34 was legal.

The causing of the death of a person by doing an act accompanied by intention in the two ways described in S. 299 or with the knowledge that the act is likely to cause death also described there, is distinguished from cases of deaths resulting from accident or rash and negligent act and those cases where death may result but the offence is of causing hurt either simple or grievous. Once it was established, that the act was a deliberate act and was not the result of accident or rashness or negligence, it is obvious that the offence which was committed was one under S. 304.

The requirement of S. 34, i.e., the existence of the common intention before the criminal act is perpetrated was completely satisfied because the six accused could not but by a prior concert have appeared simultaneously at the scene, and chased and overthrown the victim, held him down and beaten him. Provided there is common intention, the whole of the result perpetrated by several offenders, is attributable to each offender, notwithstanding that individually they may have done separate acts, diverse or similar. AIR 1925 P C 1, Rel. on.

The second part of S. 304 speaks of knowledge and does not refer to intention which has been segregated in the first part. But knowledge is the knowledge of the likelihood of death. If it could be said that knowledge of this type was possible in the case of each one of the accused, there is no reason why S. 304, Part 2 cannot be read with S. 34. The common intention is with regard to the criminal act, i.e., the act of beating. If the result of the beating is the death of the victim, and if each of the assailants possesses the knowledge that death is the likely consequence of the criminal act of beating there is no reason why S. 34 or S. 35 should not be read with the second part of S. 304 to make each liable individually.

It is an error to view the second part of S. 304 divorced from common intention whatever. A person does not do an act except with a certain intention; and the common intention which is requisite for the application of S. 34 is the common intention of perpetrating a particular act. Previous concert which is insisted upon is the meeting of the minds regarding the achievement of a criminal act. That circumstance is completely fulfilled in a case where a large number of persons attack an individual, chase him, throw him on the ground and beat him till he dies. Even if the offence does not come to the grade of murder, and is only culpable homicide not amounting to murder, there is no doubt whatever that the offence is shared by all of them and S. 34 then makes the responsibility several if there was a knowledge possessed by each of them that death was likely to be caused as a result of that beating. Abrahim Sheikh v. State of W. B., (1964) 1 S C W R 344 : (1964) 6 S C R 172 : 1964 Mad W N 552 : (1964) 2 S C A 656 : 1964 (2) Cri L J 350 : (1964) Cur L J (SC) 152 : 1964 All Cri 187 : 1964 All L J 437 : 1964 All W R (HC) 275 : 1964 B L J R 361 : AIR 1964 S C 1263 (1265 to 1268) (Prs 4, 5, 8 to 11).

—Ss. 304, Part 2, 325 and 34—Applicability — Essential ingredients — Knowledge that act was likely to cause death.

A particular knowledge is an essential ingredient of the offence under S. 304, Part 2. Unless a Court can record finding that each person, taking part in committing the crime in furtherance of the common intention of all, had the knowledge that their act was likely to cause death, the accused cannot be rightly held guilty under S. 304, latter part. AIR 1951 All 21, Rel. on.

Where, therefore, out of six injuries inflicted by four persons upon the deceased, five injuries were simple and only one was grievous which resulted in death:

Held, that obviously that injury could have been inflicted only by one person. It must be taken that the person who inflicted that injury had the knowledge that it was likely to cause death but knowledge of one person was not necessarily the knowledge of others and as it was not ascertained as to who inflicted the fatal injury, none of the accused could be rightly convicted under S. 304, Penal Code, though they were all guilty under S. 325 read with S. 34, Penal Code. 1953 All W R (HC) 147 : 1953 Cri L J 1111 : 1953 All L J 346 : AIR 1953 All 491 (492) (Pt A) (Pr 10).

——S. 304, Part 2—Vicarious liability.

It is logically wrong to hold that S. 34 can never be applied to a case under the second part of S. 304. A person commits an offence under S. 304 when he intends to cause an injury which is not necessarily fatal but which he knows is likely to prove fatal. The intention to do something is present although not the intention to commit murder. The intention in so far as it relates to the causing of injuries may be shared by other persons. The knowledge that an injury is likely to prove fatal may also be shared and if that be so then a person can be held vicariously liable under the second part of S. 304. Where a number of persons go armed with axes in order to assault their opponents or enemies and use axes in prosecution of the common object, everyone of them may reasonably be expected to know that the offence of culpable homicide is likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. Hence although the death of the injured may have been caused by the blow given by one of the accused, all the other accused who took part in the offence along with him can be held constructively liable for causing the death of the victim and should be convicted under S. 304, Part 2 read with S. 149, Penal Code. 1956 Cri L J 1066 : A I R 1956 Bom 609 (612) (Pt D) (Pr 11a) (DB).

The deceased had forsaken her husband the accused and her child by him and had gone to live with another person. Some ten days later, the accused went to the village of that person to bring the deceased back. The person was not at home. The accused caught hold of the deceased and started back for his house. On the way the deceased refused to go with the accused and wanted to go back to the person. The accused thereupon gave her some stick blows and as the result of this she died. The accused himself gave F. I. R. giving all these facts. He admitted these facts before the Sessions Court as well. The medical evidence showed that there were as many as eight injuries on the body of the deceased. Material injury for purposes of S. 302 was contused lacereted wound on the head extending over an area of 4" x 1/2" and was scalp deep. Internal examination showed no fracture but meningeal artery was ruptured and there was internal haemorrhage in the brain :

Held that having regard to the nature of the weapon used and the force with which the blows were given which could not have been considerable in view of the fact that there were no fracture of the skull, it could not be said that the accused intended to cause death. But, there was no doubt that the accused caused injuries to his wife and that he should be taken to know that these injuries were likely to cause death and the accused should be convicted under S. 304. ——S. 304 (II) — Assault with lathi causing death — Assault single and not premeditated — Case covered by S. 304 (II) and not by S. 302.

Accused was convicted under S. 302, I. P. Code for having caused the death of C by giving him one blow with a lathi over his head. Both the deceased and the accused had a hot exchange of abuses and had grappled with each other. The accused when he followed the deceased was unarmed and picked up the lathi lying near about and inflicted the single blow with it. He was sentenced to life imprisonment by the Sessions Judge.

Held, that the assault was with the lathi used as a weapon which was the only piece lying there and naturally came handy to the enraged accused. The assault was not at all a premeditated one. At the spur of the moment while picking it up at random the accused could never be said to have had realised that it was a dangerous weapon and only one blow was given. In the circumstances it could not be safely held that the accused intended to cause such injuries as would render him guilty of murder. He could be safely ascribed the knowledge, especially in view of the medical evidence, that the blow was given with considerable force and that he knew the likely consequence of the assault. AIR 1954 S C 652, Rel. 1962 M P L J (Notes) 51.

——S. 304, Part 2 and 302 — Exorcism for curing woman of evil spirits — Death by suffocation by smoke—Act with knowledge that it is likely to cause death—Offence.

The accused, in order to cure the deceased woman of the hysteria which showed itself in spells of fainting, and fits of convulsions taken to be symptoms of possession by an evil spirit, tied up the deceased and raised considerable quantity of smoke before her. Finding that the deceased was not cured of it on the first occasion, the accused repeated the process with double the quantities of the things to raise smoke. A fire was raised, and the deceased was made to sit before it after which the accused tied her hands and feet and further secured her to a granite mortar by a rope, and she was left alone with the accused. When the door was opened in the early morning next day life was found to be extinct. The medical evidence showed marked congestion of lungs with carbon particles in the respiratory passages, and congestion of all internal organs and lacerated external injuries. The prosecution did not claim that the accused intended to cause the death of the woman. However deluded he might have been, the accused was under the genuine impression that the woman was possessed by an evil spirit and that he could exorcise her effectively by means of such prolonged ritual. The lacerated injuries also showed that the accused inflicted some external violence on the deceased. The accused has to be credited with the knowledge that such measures were likely to cause the death of the victim and if he indulged in those measures notwithstanding such knowledge he did so under the peril of being convicted under the criminal law. The accused has to be convicted under S. 304, Part 2 of the Penal Code. (1964) 1 M L J 188 : (1964) Mad L J (Cri) 157 : 1964 (2) Cri L J 557 : AIR 1964 Mad 480 (481) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

——S. 304, Part 2 and 325—Scope — Blow not likely to cause death.

Second part of S. 304 applies where there is no guilty intention but there is guilty knowledge. Though the result of an ordinary lathi blow was unexpectedly unfortunate in that the person struck died, it cannot be said that the accused known in the village as "pagla" (lunatic) could have any knowledge of the likelihood of causing death by such a blow. Abdomen is a delicate part of the body and vulnerable too and if violence is used on it resulting in fracture of ribs and rupture of the spleen, it can be safely presumed that the accused should have known that such a violence on his part was likely to cause death of the person to whom it was used and more specially when the man was old, sickly and infirm. ——Ss. 304 and 304-A—Applicability — Boy playing in the middle of road — Truck passing over—Death — Offence.

The accused was driving his truck at a very great speed. He did not blow horn. Nor did he stop the truck on seeing children playing on the road. A boy of six years was in the middle of the road. The accused kept on driving at a high speed. The truck passed over the boy, and he was killed. There was no suggestion of enmity between the accused and the deceased. There was no definite evidence to prove that the accused deliberately took his truck over the boy.

Held, that the death was due to rash and negligent act of the driver and the offence was one under S. 304-A and not under S. 304. 1959 All W R (H C) 410 : 1959 All Cr R 326 : 1959 (2) All L J 548.

——Ss. 304 and 325 — Applicability — Nature of offence—Determination of—Intention.

The accused intended to strike a lathi blow at the father, C, when unexpectedly the mother intervened with a child in her lap and the blow fell on the child causing its death.

It appeared from evidence that the weapon used by the accused was a lathi, and that C, the person aimed at, was 50 years of age, and that the lathi was wielded with such force that the child was thrown down to the ground from the lap of its mother. Held, that regard being had to these data cumulatively, the only reasonable inference should be that had the blow struck C, the person at whom it was aimed, it would in all probability have caused grievous hurt. The accused should therefore be convicted under S. 325, and not under S. 304, I. P. C. ——Ss. 304, Part 2 and 326—Scope—Charge under S. 304. read with S. 149—Acquittal — Conviction under S. 326—Propriety.

One morning the deceased went to his field with some ploughmen. The accused also went there armed with dangerous weapons and attacked him. D was said to have given the first blow with a jatha on the eye. B struck him with a dao on the head several times. H gave the deceased a dao blow on the eye when he fell down and then all the accused except one were said to have given the deceased indiscriminate beating. The charge against the appellants was under S. 304 read with S. 149 of the Penal Code but the jury returned a verdict of not guilty in respect of that charge. They however returned a unanimous verdict of guilty under S. 304. Part 2 against D, B, and H. No charge was framed under this section. The Assistant Sessions Judge was of the opinion that they could be convicted only under S. 326. On a reference under S. 307, Criminal P. C.

Held, that in the circumstances of the case, the accused D, B and H could not be convicted under S. 304, Part 2, the evidence not being enough to fix liablility for culpable homicide on any or each as the result of his own acts, but that they could be held guilty under S. 326 and no prejudice would be caused to the accused thereby. ——Ss. 304 and 304A—Charge of culpable homicide —Condition precedent — Ingredients of S. 304A— Held offence alleged was one under S. 304A and not under S. 304.

One boy was riding cycle and proceeded along left side of road when bus driven by A came up and dashed against it from behind with result that boy was drawn off cycle and fell between front and rear wheels of bus and was smashed to death. A failed to stop the bus until he went ahead about 6 cubits with the result that the boy was completely run over. Before the bus struck the cycle A did not sound the horn. A was arrested and charge sheet under S. 304A was submitted. On request by prosecution the Magistrate treated the case under S. 304 and followed procedure under Ch. XVIII. In application to quash order of commitment:

Held, that unless and until the intention to cause death or the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death is established or circumstances are proved which will make it appear that the person doing the act did it with the knowledge that he was likely to cause death, no charge can possibly be laid for culpable homicide. A did not drive the bus with the knowledge that he was likely by such act of driving to cause the death of the unfortunate boy. The Magistrate completely misdirected himself in thinking that the allegations made out a charge under S. 304.

Held further that the ingredients of S. 304A merely require proof of death and the doing of any rash or negligent act which does not amount to culpable homicide. If these elements are satisfied, an offence under S. 304A is proved. It cannot be said that the mere act of rash or negligent driving of a bus with its mechanism tolerably in order, on a road in condition, by a person licensed to drive such vehicles, will make the act an act of culpable homicide. The offence alleged was one under S. 304A and not under S. 304.

Hence order of committal was set aside and the Magistrate was directed to proceed under Ch. XXI. I L R (1957) 2 Cal 269.

——Ss. 304 and 323 — Applicability — Absence or intention to cause death or grievous hurt—Effect.

When the injury is not serious and there was no intention to cause death or grievous hurt, nor did the accused have knowledge that it was likely to cause grievous hurt or death, he is guilty of causing hurt and not death even though death is caused. Therefore where from the circumstances of the case it is impossible to draw an inference that the accused would have intended to give the deceased anything more than a beating or thrashing to teach him a lesson for using foul language to him, a police officer, it would not be possible to attribute to him the requisite intention or knowledge merely because of the diseased condition of the spleen of the deceased which got ruptured. In such circumstances his conviction under S. 304 cannot stand. 1959 Ker L R 128: 1959 Ker L J 150 : 1959 Ker L T 258 : 1959 Mad L J (Cr) 641 : 1959 Cr L J 1331 : AIR 1959 Ker 372 (376) (Pt C) (Prs 9, 10) (DB).

SYNOPSIS

(Penal Code (1860), S. 304-A.)

1. "Rash or negligent act"—Meaning.
2. Death must be direct result of rash or negligent act.
3. Rash or negligent act—Illustrations.
   — Act held not rash or negligent.
4. Rash or negligent driving.
5. Contributory negligence.
6. Sentence.

1. "Rash or negligent act"—Meaning.

——S. 304-A—Mens rea — Concept of mens rea and description given of the state of mind in S. 304-A was far more helpful than the notice of degrees of negligence in defining and explaining that degree of negligence and rashness which distinguishes a criminally culpable wrong from a tort involving a civil liability only, one is almost impelled to say that criminal negligence or rashness is one which requires a particular mens rea. Difficulty in reading words such as "grossly" or "highly" before words "rash" or "negligent" in S. 304-A is that such qualifying words could easily have been used by the legislature but are not there. Applying a well-recognized principle of interpretation the absence of such qualifying words must be deemed to be intentional. But applying equally well-recognised principle the requirements of mens rea can be read into a provision creating a criminal offence and proceed to specify what this means with reference to a particular provisions. It is therefore preferred to conceive of criminal rashness or negligence in terms of the required mens rea. 1964 All W R (HC) 154 : 1964 All Cri R 128 : 1965 (1) Cri L J 324 : AIR 1965 All 195 (200) (Pt B) (Pr 17) (DB).

——S. 304-A — Distinction between civil and criminal liability.

Before a conviction can be had under S. 304-A, Penal Code, a very high degree of negligence must be found, negligence which must amount to recklessness or utter indifference to consequences and not merely negligence of tort. Rashness and negligence are not the same things. Mere negligence cannot be construed to mean rashness. There are degrees of negligence and rashness, and, in order to amount to criminal rashness or criminal negligence, one must find that the rashness has been of such a degree as to amount to taking hazard knowingly that the hazard was of such a degree that injury was most iikely to be occasioned thereby. The criminality lies in running the risk or doing such an act with recklessness and indifference to the consequences. Criminal negligence is a gross and culpable neglect, that is to say, a failure to exercise that care and failure to take that precaution which, having regard to the circumstances, it was the imperative duty of the individual to take. Culpable rashness is acting with consciousness that mischievous consequences are likely to follow although the individual hopes, even though he hopes sincerely, that such consequences may not follow. The criminality lies in not taking the precautions to prevent the happening of the consequences in the hope that they may not happen. The law does not permit a man to be uncautious on a hope however earnest or honest that hope may be : AIR 1954 All 186, Foll.; AIR 1950 All 300, Rel. on. 1964 All W R (HC) 134 : 1964 All Cri R 118 : 1965 (1) Cri L J 524 : AIR 1965 All 198 (198, 199) (Pt C) (Prs 9, 13).

——Ss. 304-A, 279, 280, 336, 337 and 338 — Offences defined by Ss. 279, 280, 336, 337 and 338 can be viewed as minor offences included within S. 304-A— Accused once convicted under S. 304-A cannot be convicted under S. 279 for minor offence. 1964 All W R (HC) 134 : 1964 All Cri R 118 : 1965 (1) Cri L J 524 : AIR 1965 All 196 (201) (Pt D) (Prs 20, 24).

——S. 304-A — 'Rash or negligent act'—Negligence consists in not taking care such as a man of ordinary prudence is expected to take and to do an act regardless of consequences is rashness—Held on facts that accused was guilty of both rash and negligent driving : AIR 1939 Peshwar 33 and AIR 1954 M P 41, Disting. 1964 All W R (HC) 349.

——S. 304-A—Applicability.

Section 304-A does not apply to a case in which there has been the voluntary commission of an offence against the person. If a man intentionally commits such an offence, and consequences beyond his purpose result, it is for the Court to determine how far he can be held to have the knowledge that he was likely by such an act to cause the actual result. If such knowledge can be imputed, the result is not to be attributed to mere rashness; if it cannot be imputed still, the wilful offence does not take the character of rashness, because its consequences have been unfortunate.

Acts which are offences in themselves must be judged with regard to the knowledge, or means of knowledge of the offender, and placed in their appropriate place in the class of offences of the same character. Where the act is in its nature criminal, S. 304-A has no application. 1955 Cri L J 1448 : AIR 1955 All 626 (629) (Pr 8) (DB).

——S. 304-A—Rash or negligent act.

Before a conviction can be had under S. 304-A, Penal Code, a very high degree of negligence must be found, negligence which must amount to recklessness or utter indifference to consequences and not merely negligence of tort.

Rashness and negligence are not the same thing. Mere negligence cannot be construed to mean rashness. There are degrees of negligence and rashness. Criminal negligence is gross and culpable neglect, that is to say, a failu[illegible] to exercise that care and failure to take that precaution which having regard to the circumstances, it was the imperative duty of the individual to take; culpable rashness is acting with consciousness that mischievous consequences are likely to follow although the individual hopes, even though he hopes sincerely, that consequences may not follow. The criminality lies in not taking the precautions to prevent the happening of the consequences in the hope that they may not happen. ——S. 304-A —Criminal rashness—Tests — To judge criminality of accused one should put himself in situation in which accused found himself and see what would be his reaction—Driver of goods train not seeing raised signal which was meant for him due to visual obstruction caused by tree and other railway construction but wrongly thinking that the lowered signal was meant for him — Train carried to a line ending dead end—Accident causing death of persons—Accused held not guilty under S. 304-A.

Where a driver of goods train was misled by railway signals due to visual obstructions caused by railway constructions and a tree and could not see the raised signal meant for him and thinking that the line was clear (being misled by the lowered signal not meant for him) drove on the train on a particular line, and dashed the train against the dead end with the result that some persons who were beyond the dead end unauthorisedly were killed, in order to judge of the criminality of the accused it is necessary, to put one-self in his position and to see what in the circumstances which were before him would be the normal reaction to these signals of a man situated as he was. It is easy after the event to analyse the happenings and to find out possible methods or devices which if adopted may have averted the accident. But this would be a wrong approach. Criminal rashness means hazarding a dangerous or wanton act with the knowledge that it is dangerous or wanton and the further knowledge that it may cause injury but done without any intention to cause injury or knowledge that it would probably be caused. The criminality in such a case lies in running the risk of doing such an act with recklessness or indifference as to the consequence. Criminal negligence under S. 304-A is gross and culpable neglect or failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care and to take precaution to guard against injury either to the public generally or to an individual in particular, which, having regard to all the circumstances attending the charge, it was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted. Where the accused exercised the ordinary caution which was demanded of him inasmuch as he slowed down his train on entering the yard, it is difficult to saddle him with the knowledge that his train was to be received on the platform with a dead end line or failure to notice that a further signal which was intended for that particular line but which was obstructed from view, was not lowered. It is impossible, to insist in such a case that the driver should have discerned that the signals which misled him were not intended for him. His action might be unfortunate but could by no means be called grossly negligent. 3 All 776; 53 Cal 333, Applied. 1952 All L J 553 : 1952 All W R (HC) 604 : 1952 All Cri R 159 : 1953 Cri L J 324 : AIR 1953 All 72 (73) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 304-A—Rash or negligent act—Having—Liability for—Civil and criminal—Distinction—Mere error of judgment is not sufficient for criminal liability.

Section 304-A does not apply to cases where there is an intention to cause death or knowledge that the act done will in all probability cause death. It only applies to cases in which without any such intention or knowledge death is caused by what is described as a 'rash' or 'negligent' act. A negligent act is an act done without doing something which a reasonable man, guided upon those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or an act which a prudent or reasonable man would not do in the circumstances attending it. A rash act is a negligent act done precipitately. Negligence is the genus, of which rashness is the species. It has sometimes been observed that in rashness the action is done precipitately with the consciousness that the mischievous or illegal consequences may follow, but with a hope that they will not. But it is not necessary that there should always be this consciousness in a rash act. It has also been observed that in negligence there is no such consciousness of the consequences. This is also untrue : (1937) 2 All E R 552, Rel. on.

What may be called a negligent act in civil proceedings is not necessarily so in criminal cases. The principles of liability governing civil actions based on negligence differ from those governing criminal liability in two important particulars, firstly, that negligence in a criminal case must be culpable and gross and not the want of care which is incident to an error of judgment, or arises because of defect of intelligence; and secondly, that the principle of the avoidance of liability when there is contributory negligence by the injured person is no defence in criminal law : (1907) 172 E R 579, 16 Cox's Cr C 710, Ref.

But at the same time in order to find whether there was negligence at all, or whether the negligence was so gross as to make the accused criminally liable, one has to take into consideration all the attending circumstances and the attending circumstances must include the situation created by the negligent act of injured person.

The accused was driving at 15 or 20 miles per hour. When he saw the deceased in front of his lorry he blew the horn. When the deceased did not listen to the horn the accused swerved to his left in order to avoid the deceased. When the accused had already swerved to the left the deceased turned to his right, that is, in the same direction in which the lorry had been turned by the accused. The accused thereupon still further turned his lorry to the left so as to reach the footpath on the left. At this point the deceased was caught underneath the lorry and crushed ;

Held, that even if it be assumed that a more careful driver would have stopped the lorry at once, the act of the accused in swerving to his left, in order to avoid the deceased, was not so grossly negligent or reckless that the accused must be held criminally liable. 1950 All W R (HC) 23 : 1950 All Cri Cas 5 : 1950 All L J 93 : 51 Cri L J 805 : AIR 1950 All 800 (DB) (Pts 6, 7, 11, 12).

——S. 304-A—Rashness and negligence—Distinction between.

There is a distinction between rashness and negligence. If a person does an act with utter indifference to the consequences of which he may be conscious but which he hopes may not take place, he is said to be rash; and neglect to take that precaution which a reasonable and prudent person is expected to take under the circumstances obtaining in a given case is criminal negligence. In order to infer whether or not there is criminal rashness or negligence on the part of the accused, all relevant facts have to be considered, 57 Bom L R 672 : 1955 Mah L J 965 : 1956 Cri L J 400 : AIR 1955 Bom 122 (124) (Pr 5); (Pr 13).

——S. 304-A—Ingredients of S. 304-A—Held, offence alleged was one under S. 304A and not under S. 304, See Penal Code (1860), S. 304. ILR (1957) 2 Cal 239.

——S. 304-A—Applicability.

Intentionally or knowingly inflicted violence directly or wilfully caused is excluded under S. 304-A, Penal Code. In other words, the said section does not apply to a case in which there has been voluntary commission of an offence against a person. Thus where bodily injury is intentionally inflicted and the victim dies, the offence will be one of simple or grievous hurt if the intention or knowledge which is an ingredient of culpable homicide is wanting. 8 All 776 and 7 Mad H C R 119, Rel. on. 1968 (1) Cri L J 765 : AIR 1968 Him Pra 18 (20) (Pr 5) (Pr 17).

——S. 304-A—Rash and negligent act—Tests.

The question whether the accused's conduct amounted to culpable rashness or negligence depends directly on the question as to what is the amount of care and circumspection which a prudent and reasonable man would consider it to be sufficient considering all the circumstances of the case. In such cases it is necessary to avoid being influenced by the prejudices arising out of the loss of a life which is so important a factor in accident cases : AIR 1944 Sind 124 : A I R 1950 All 800 and AIR 1928 Cal 530, Rel. on. 1958 Cri L J 343 : AIR 1958 Mys 123 (124) (Pr 2).

——S. 304-A — Negligence — Culpable rashness — Negligence is the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided upon those circumstances which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do. In order to establish the criminal liability the fact must be such that the negligence of the accused shows such disregard or lack to the safety of the other. While culpable rashness is acting with consciousness that the mischievous and illegal consequences may follow, but with the hope that they will not and often with the belief that the actor has taken sufficient precautions to prevent their happening. A I R 1956 Madh Bha 41 (41) (Pr 12).

——S. 304-A—Rashness and negligence—Distinction—Person might be rash as well as negligent—Punishment—Principles to be followed—Circumstances for consideration.

Held, that negligence was not doing an act which one was bound to do because he adverted not to do it. Rashness was running a risk of which one was conscious. Culpable negligence was acting without the consciousness that dangerous consequences would follow. It was culpable rashness when a person thought of the probable mischief but in consequence of a mis-supposition or omission of insufficient advertence, he assumed that mischief would not ensue. All the same it was possible that a person might sometimes be both rash and negligent. Further it should be remembered that the twin objects of punishment normally are to prevent the convict from repeating it or to prevent others from doing similar things. Sentences must, therefore, be passed so that both the objects might be achieved. 1984 M P L J (Notes) 68.

——S. 304-A—Charge under—Alternative charge, for rashness or negligence—Rashness and negligence—Distinction.

A charge is defective if it uses the words 'rashness and negligence'. The accused can be charged alternatively for rashness or negligence. Culpable rashness is acting with the consciousness that the mischievous and illegal consequences may follow, but with the hope that they will not and often with the belief that the actor has taken sufficient precautions to prevent their happening. The imputability arises from acting, despite the consciousness. Culpable negligence is acting without the consciousness that the illegal and mischievous effect will follow, but in circumstances incumbent upon him and that if he had, he would have had the consciousness. The imputability arises from the negligence of civic duty of circumspection. Criminal rashness and criminal negligence are two different things. 1959 M P L J 856 : 1959 Jab L J 495 : 1959 M P C 614 : 1960 Cri L J 482 : AIR 1960 Mah Pra 105 (106) (Pt C) (Pr 11).

——S. 304-A—Culpable rashness — Negligence—Distinction.

Acting with the consciousness that mischievous and illegal consequences may follow but with the hope that they will not follow is culpable rashness. Culpable negligence is acting without the consciousness that the illegal and mischievous effect will follow : 1953 N L J 320, Foll. 1959 M P L J (Notes) 138.

——S. 304-A — "Rash and negligent act"—Death of cyclist.

Rashness means doing an act with the consciousness of a risk that the evil consequences will follow but with the hope that they will not. Negligence is a breach of duty imposed by law. In criminal cases, the amount and degree of negligence are the determining factors. There must be mens rea in criminal negligence also. In order to establish criminal liability the facts must be such that the negligence of the accused went beyond a mere matter of comprehension and showed such disregard for the life and safety of others as to amount to a crime. Russel on Crime (1950) Edition, Page 641, Rel. on. 1957 Jab L J 208 : 1957 M P C 176 : 1957 M P L J 315 : 1956 Cri L J 1416 : AIR 1957 Madh Pra 236 (237) (Prs 5 to 8).

——S. 304-A — Scope — Mines Act, Ss. 72 and 74 — Offences under Mines Act and S. 304A of Penal Code are not same—Rashness and negligence are not necessary ingredients of offence under Ss. 72 and 74 of Mines Act — What is rashness indicated. See Mines Act (1952), S. 72. 1957 M P L J (Notes) 196.

——S. 304-A — Applicability — Criminal and Civil negligence—Distinction.

In sections of the Penal Code where the mens rea required is negligence, the word "negligence" is not used in any different manner from the word "negligence" in civil law. But there is bound to be difference between the proof of negligence required to sustain a conviction for criminal negligence and proof of negligence required in a civil suit to obtain compensation for damages. In a civil suit, it is sufficient to prove neglect of duty by consideration of the probabilities of the case But in criminal law it is necessary to prove beyond reasonable doubt the negligent act of the accused which resulted in particular harm to a person, such as hurt, grievous hurt, or death. (1962) 2 Mad L J 508 : 1962 Mad L J (Cri) 668 : 1963 (1) Cri L J 690 (690) (Pr 4) (Mad).

——S. 304-A— Criminal rashness and criminal negligence defined.

Criminal rashness is hazarding a dangerous or wanton act with the knowledge that it is so and that it may cause injury, but without intention to cause injury or knowledge that it will probably be caused. The criminality lies in running the risk of doing such an act with recklessness or indifference as to the consequences. Culpable negligence is the gross and culpable neglect or failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care and precaution to guard against injury to public generally or to an individual in particular which having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge has arisen, it was the imperative duty of the accused to have adopted. 3 All 776 and 53 Cal 333, Foll. See Cr. P. Code (1898), S. 403 (1). 1965 (2) Cri L J 683 : A I R 1965 Raj 221.

——S. 304-A — Offence under S. 304-A, is distinct from offences under Ss. 3/112, 89 and 126, Motor Vehicles Act. See Cr. P. Code (1898), S. 403 (1). 1965 (2) Cri L J 683 : AIR 1965 Raj 221.

——S. 304-A—Degree of rashness and negligence on the part of the accused required to be proved in criminal cases should be of such a nature that an inference about the commission of a crime may be safely made against him. Simple lack of care which may give rise to evil liability will not be enough for the purpose of establishing guilt of the accused under S. 304-A. 1961 (2) Cri L J 561 (562) (Pr 4) (Raj).

——S. 304-A—Mens rea, is essential.

Under S. 304A carelessness is not sufficient. Section 304A like other sections of the Penal Code, requires a mens rea or guilty mind. The rashness or negligence must be such as fairly to be described criminal. The question whether the accused's conduct in a particular case amounted to culpable rashness or negligence would have to be judged from the circumstances of each case and on the question as to what is the amount of care and circumspection which a prudent and reasonable man would consider to be sufficient upon all the circumstances of the case. 1953 Cri L J 94 : AIR 1953 Sau 10 (11, 12) (Prs 5, 6) (DB).

2. Death must be direct result of rash or negligent act.

——S. 304-A — Death must be direct result of the rash or negligent act of accused and the act must be efficient cause without intervention of another's negligence—It must be the causa causans; it is not enough that it may have been the causa sine qua non. 4 Bom L R 679, Approved. (1965) 1 S C W R 718 : (1965) 2 S C R 622 : 1965 All Cri R 331 : 1965 S C D 1056 : 1965 M P L J 562 : 67 Bom L R 447 : 1965 Mah L J 497 : 1965 (2) Cri L J 550 : 1965 All W R (HC) 527 : AIR 1965 S C 1616 (1617, 1618) (Pt A) (Prs 3, 4).

——S. 304-A—Conviction — Essentials—Death must be direct result of rash or negligent act.

In order to impose criminal liability under S. 304 A of the Code, it is essential to prove that death must have been the direct result of the rash, negligent act of the accused. The act of the accused must be the approximate and the efficient cause without the intervention of any other circumstance. It must be cause causans and not merely the cause sine qua non.

Where, therefore, the deceased persons in their endeavour to save themselves from an imminent danger caused by the collision of the truck with the Railway engine received the fatal injuries; while the persons who remained in the truck had not received such severe injuries on their persons.

Held, that it was a fit case for giving benefit of doubt to the driver accused under S. 304. ILR (1953)

5 Assam 412 ; 55 Cri L J 1297 : AIR 1954 Assam 169 (169) (Pr 2).

—S. 304-A and S. 337 — Causing death by negligence — Accident must be direct result of rash or negligent act.

In order to establish a charge of negligence under S. 304-A of the Penal Code, it must be established that the accident was the direct result of the negligence or rashness of the accused. A far higher standard of proof of negligence or rashness in a criminal prosecution is required by the Court in England, because the offence there is that of manslaughter if death is caused. But in respect of the offence under Ss. 304-A and 337 of the Penal Code, the same standard cannot obtain though no doubt the guilt must be proved beyond reasonable doubt. AIR 1943 P C 193, Rel. on. 67 Bom L R 472 : 1965 Mah L J 668 : 1963 Cri L J 490 : AIR 1936 Bom 122 (124) (Pt A) (Pr 22).

—S. 304-A—Applicability—Death must be result of rash or negligent act—Expression 'act' includes illegal omission.

In order to impose criminal liability on a person under S. 304-A, I. P. C. the rash or negligent act which causes the death of the victim must be the immediate or proximate cause of death and not any act or omission which can be said to be a remote cause of death. The expression "act" includes, unless the context otherwise warrants, an illegal omission (vide S. 32 of the Indian Penal Code). But not only must the act or illegal omission result in death, but the death must have been the direct result of the act or illegal omission of the accused. (1902) 4 Bom L R 679, Foll.

The accused were respectively the occupier, manager, manager in charge at the relevant time and the engineer of a factory. A valve pit in the purification plant of the factory stopped functioning and, on instructions from a person attending the plant, a labourer entered into the valve pit and was overpowered by poisonous fumes and became unconscious.

The same fate befell four others who entered the pit and all of them died. The accused were charged under S. 304-A, I. P. C. for having neglected to take all practicable measures to remove the fumes of dangerous gases from the pit of the purification plant in the mill premises and for having also neglected to provide the workers with suitable breathing apparatus and belts, and with failing to take the necessary precautions and thereby causing the death of the victims. None of the four accused was present when the workmen entered the pit nor was it the prosecution case that any of the accused directed the workmen to enter the pit. There was also no evidence on the record to show that it was even to the knowledge of any of the four accused that these workmen had entered the pit.

Held, that the death of the workmen of the factory was not the same causes of any act or illegal omission on the part of the four accused or any of them, and they could not be convicted under S. 304-A. 61 Bom L R 1909 : ILR (1959) Bom 1758.

—S. 304-A—Applicability—Conditions.

A person can be held guilty under S. 304-A, Penal Code, only when it is held that he 'caused' the death. A conviction can be sustained under S. 304-A of the Penal Code if death is the direct result of rash or negligent act of the accused. That act must have been the immediate, proximate and efficient cause, the causa causans and not merely the causa sine qua non of death without the intervention of any other negligence. 61 Bom L R 679 and AIR 1939 All 232, Rel. on. Where the accused, who was registered as a Homoeopath, administered to the patient suffering from guinea worm, 24 drops of stramonium and a leaf of datura without studying its effect and the patient died of poisoning, the accused was guilty under S. 304-A and not under S. 302, Penal Code. The prisoner's contents of the leaf having not been satisfactorily established, the prosecution failed to prove that the dose given to the deceased was necessarily fatal. Therefore S. 299 did not apply and it cannot be held that the accused administered the stramonium drops and datura with the knowledge that he was likely by such an act to cause the death of the deceased. (c) —Ss. 304-A, 304 and 302 — Rash and negligent act.

A, a madman went to the house of B who was having a drink party. B was respectful to A and was over anxious to show all hospitality to him. B was anxious that the lunatic should not go away leaving his horse without taking meals and spending the night with him, and seeing that he was going away, in all probability let go his gun without aiming it at the lunatic in order to prevent him from leaving his place by terrifying him to some extent. The shot hit A in chest and he died of the wound later on. The evidence of the eye-witnesses and the first information report showed that the incident happened in a very short time and suddenly but the story that B took aim before firing at the lunatic or that he said that he had never allowed in the past anybody to go like that from his house was subsequently introduced in the case to add gravity to the offence committed by the accused.

Held, that on the materials placed on the record it could not be held proved that B had any intention of firing at the Mahant. He seems to have pulled the trigger without aiming at the Mahant in a state of intoxication in order to see that by the gun fire the Mahant was prevented from leaving his place. It was a wholly rash and negligent act on B's part or at the worst was an act which would amount to manslaughter. It could not be held to constitute an offence of murder. B was, therefore, held guilty of an offence under S. 304-A; Penal Code, and sentenced to imprisonment already undergone by him;

(ii) that even if the offence were to be regarded as falling under S. 304, Penal Code, a severer punishment than the imprisonment that he has already undergone, was not neccssary. Sadhu Singh v. State of Pepsu, 1954 Cri L J 727 : I L R (1954) Patiala 66 : AIR 1954 S C 271 (276) (Pt B) (Pr 13).

——S. 304-A — Rash and negligent act — Ferrying passengers in river in floods—Boat capsizing — Loss of life — Ferry contractor is guilty under S. 304-A — Servants ferrying boat not guilty.

Where a ferry contractor, who had not taken a licence for the ferry service across the river after the expiry of his previous licence took the risk of putting the boat in water and ferrying passengers and transporting them, as floods in the river were receding, and there was a heavy wave which dashed against the boat and capsized it resulting in the loss of lives, the accused is guilty of rash and negligent act under S. 304-A.

But servants of the ferry contractor, who had ferried the boat cannot be held to be guilty under S. 304-A. Negligence and rashness consisted in taking the decision to ferry passengers in spite of the river being in floods. The responsibility for that decision and carrying it out was solely of the ferry contractor. 1962 Nag L J 329 : 1962 All Cri R 257 : 1962 All W R (Supp) 65 : 1963 (1) Cri L J 44 : I L R (1962) Bom 404 : AIR 1963 Bom 1 (2) (Pr 6).

The fact that a person totally ignorant of the science of medicine or practice of surgery undertakes a treatment or performs an operation is very material in showing his gross ignorance from which an inference about his gross rashness and negligence in undertaking the treatment can be inferred.

Where the accused a Hakim, had no knowledge whatsoever of Penicillin injection treatment, his act of giving Procain Penicillin injection to the deceased would be clearly rash and negligent within the meaning of S. 304-A. 1959 Jab L J 602 : 1959 M P C 672 : 1959 M P LJ 966 : 1960 Cri L J 234 : AIR 1960 Madh Pra 50 (50) (Pr 4).

——S. 304-A—Rash and negligent act.

The driver of an express goods train which was not expected to stop at a station slowed down on reaching the outer signal and on nearing the station yard saw only the inner starter signal of another line down —The starter signals of the line he was coming in obstructed from his view by a banyan tree and a water tank—and so he was running through at a speed of only ten miles an hour, and on coming to realise that the starter signals in the down position seen by him earlier was for another train which had just left the station—they had not been raised up again — he applied the brakes only invain and it, being a heavy goods train, ran through the dead end, a sand hump and into 2 huts unauthorisedly occupied and as a result 4 people were killed.

Held, to judge the criminality of the act of the driver charged under S. 304-A, it is necessary to put oneself in his place and see what would be the normal reaction under the said circumstance. It is possible after the event to devise modes of averting the accident. On the facts appearing as stated he had exercised the reasonable care expected of him slowed down before entering the station and was running the train at a slow speed being misled by the down position of the starter signals, which he had no reason to suspect to be not for him but for another train. ——Ss. 304-A and 80 — Death caused by shooting under a mistaken but bona fide belief that object aimed at was wild animal—No offence is committed.

The accused, an employee in an Ammunition Depot, during the fore-noon on a particular day, went along with his co-employees towards the place of occurrence with the intention of shooting a hyena which was seen in the locality on the previous day and which they honestly believed had reappeared. Visibility on that day was poor due to drizzling of rain. All the persons were under the bona fide belief that the moving object seen by them was a wild animal and not a human being; nor was the area in question one in which the accused might reasonably have anticipated the presence of human being. The accused fired a gun shot at the moving object and to their surprise the object aimed at was found to be a human being who died on the spot. The accused was acquitted of the offence under S. 304-A, Penal Code but was convicted of the offence under S. 19 (e), Arms Act and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20.

Held, that the accused was rightly found not guilty under S. 304-A, Penal Code. The facts unmistakably showed that the amount of care and circumspection taken by the accused was that which a prudent and reasonable man would consider to be adequate upon all the circumstances of the case. The whole affair was a pure accident and accused was protected by the provisions of S. 80, Penal Code. 4. Rash or negligent driving.

——S. 304-A — Rashly and negligently—Meaning — Held on facts that there was rash and negligent driving.

The words 'rashly' or 'negligently' mean doing an act without due diligence and caution. The words are comparative words. A speed of 30 to 35 miles an hour may not be rash or negligent at one place, while at another place at a curve with billocks on one side and a 'khud' on the other side it may be rash or negligent.

Thus where a lorry of its own action left the proper road near a sharp bend, though the road was clear, crossed the kachha 'pert' went down the 'khud' and came to a stop after somersaulting several times.

Held, that there was no due diligence and caution in driving it. 1952 Cri L J 1956; 1951 A M L J 97; AIR 1952 Ajmer 34 (34) (1 Jus 2, 8).

——S. 304-A—Rash or negligent driving.

The accused was driving a motor lorry when a girl of 10 was run over, the injuries caused resulting in her death. It was found that the speed was moderate and the accused was driving on the correct side of the road. It was possible that the accident took place because the girl unexpectedly crossed the road.

Held, that in the circumstances the accused could not be said to be guilty of rashness or negligence. The accused was acquitted, to the benefit of doubt. 1950 A M L J 88; 51 Cri L J 1289; AIR 1950 Ajmer 45 (46) (Pr 5).

——S. 304-A — Cyclist trying to overtake rickshaw dashing against mudguard of bus coming from opposite direction—Cyclist receiving injuries resulting in death—Bus-driver—If guilty.

A deceased cyclist in trying to overtake a rickshaw dashed against the right side of a mud-guard of a bus coming from opposite direction, fell down and received injuries resulting in death. It was established that the bus-driver had to bring his bus to a stand-still 150 yards before the accident took place because there was a cart obstructing his way. After the obstruction had cleared he again set his bus in motion, and after proceeding 100 yards or so this accident took place.

Held, that having regard to all these facts it was not possible to hold that the bus-driver was driving his bus in such a rash or negligent way as would bring him within the ambit of S. 304-A. On the other hand it was clear that there had been negligence on the part of the cyclist who in attempting to overtake a rickshaw dashed against the mud-guard of the bus. ——S. 304-A — To avoid accident motor driver impelled to take vehicle to wrong side — Situation perilous—Driver's decision proving to be wrong—He was neither rash nor negligent.

The accused was convicted for driving a bus rashly, negligently and at an excessive speed and thereby causing death of a person. In his defence the accused stated that in order to avoid collision with a car travelling from the opposite direction he had to swerve the bus to the right. that in that process the foot brakes got jammed. that in the meantime the person who was coming from the opposite direction, emerged from behind a tonga and the bus was turned further to the right to save him and that he dashed against the rear portion of the bus, fell with his bicycle and the rear wheel of the bus passed over him.

Held, that sudden mechanical failure of foot brakes was not uncommon. That being so, it appeared that the unfortunate accident was attributable to the endeavour of the accused to avoid collision with a car travelling in the opposite direction from the wrong side of the road and the mechanical failure of the foot brakes in the process of suddenly swerving it to right to do that. The motor driver was neither rash nor negligent when, in order to avoid an accident, he was suddenly impelled to take his vehicle to the wrong side of the road. It was hardly necessary to say that a driver, who was suddenly faced with a perilous situation, had to decide in split second how best to act in order to avoid it and even if he decided upon a course which might subsequently be shown to be wrong, he was not criminally liable. The circumstances appearing in the case did not fully bring home the offence to the accused. 1964 M P L J (Notes) 63.

It was in evidence that the person who was sitting with the accused was able to see the boy.

——S. 304-A—Ingredients of offence — Duty of motorist to pedestrains—Negligent driving—What is.

In an offence under S. 304-A, I. P. Code, where a death is caused by the negligent and rash driving of a motor car, negligence consists of two factors (a) speed and (b) failure to apply the brakes in time.

Both as regards the civil and criminal liability the rate of speed which will be considered dangerous varies with the nature, condition and use of the particular highway and the amount of traffic which actually is or may be expected to be on it. The driver of a vehicle must drive at a speed that will permit of his stopping or deflecting his course within the limits of his vision. It is the duty of the driver to drive his vehicle at a speed which will not imperil the safety of others using the road. The driver is under a duty of using whatever means are at hand to avoid a threatened collision. The most obvious means of avoiding the collision is the brakes with which the car must be equipped. It will constitute culpable negligence if a driver drives a vehicle with patently defective brakes or fails to apply the brakes in time.

Applying the above principles to the facts of the case, held that by reason of the criminal negligence in driving his car at a speed which the circumstances existing at the time of the collision did not warrant and secondly, by not keeping a lookout to avoid collision and thirdly, by failing to apply the efficient brakes which he had in time, and which braking would have averted the collision, the accused was plainly guilty of an offence under S. 304-A. 72 Mad L W 341 : 1959 Mad W N 67 : 1959 Mad L J (Cr) 31: (1959) 1 Mad L J 46 : 1959 Cri.L J 1344 : AIR 1959 Mad 497 (500, 501) (Pt A) (Prs 14, 17 to 19).

——S. 304-A—Rash and negligent driving.

——S. 304-A—Cyclists driving abreast and conversing —Accident with motor bus—Driver held not negligent —(Tort—Negligence—Motor accident).

Held, that it is a very common feature in Manipur that when more cyclists than one go along the road, they always drive their cycles in parallel fashion, abreast of each other and that in spite of the sounding of the horn by motor vehicles they refuse to give side and expect the motor vehicles to avoid the cycles by swerving the vehicles towards the right. In this case the driver of a bus had to swerve towards the right in order to avoid A and B who were driving their cycles in parallel fashion along the road and if at time C and D were coming in the opposite direction also in parallel fashion conversing with one another and the bus was not able to avoid one of them even though it was not coming at a high speed and it sounded its horn it could not be positively stated that the bus driver was negligent in driving the bus. It is better that the cyclists understand that driving abreast along the road on cycles is against the rules. If the accident happened when the cyclist was driving along the road against the rules the driver of the motor vehicle cannot be found fault with. 1963 (1) Cri L J 692 (692) (Pr 5) (Manipur).

——Ss. 304-A and 279 — Driver of goods vehicle carrying passengers—Passengers allowed to sit on top of goods due to negligence of driver—Passenger falling down and run over by truck—Driver is liable for offences under sections — Orissa Motor Vehicles Rules.

Held, on facts, that the driver contravened the provisions of clauses (a), (c) and (e) of R. 95 of the Orissa Motor Vehicles Rules and as in consequence of that contravention the deceased fell down and died, the liability of the driver of the vehicle for rashness and negligence necessarily followed. 31 Cut L T 279 : ILR (1964) Cut 603.

——Ss. 304-A, 279—Criminal negligence in driving loaded truck with worn out front tyre on down gradient, at excessive speed—Bursting of tyre—Truck going out of control and meeting with accident — Contravention of Rule 85 (4) of Orissa Motor Vehicles Rules, 1940, held itself, culpable negligence.

A fully loaded truck while being driven down a slope in a Ghat met with an accident by the burst of a front wheel tyre. As a result of the burst, the truck swerved to one side and the driver could not control the same. The truck turned turtle and fell in ditch. Some of the passengers were severely injured and one old lady passenger died. It was found that the truck was being driven at excessive speed of 30 to 35 miles per hour. The burst tyre was too much worn out, with its canvas exposed.

Held, that driver in undertaking the responsibility of driving a vehicle with such a worn out tyre on the front wheel which he could have noticed had he exercised ordinary care and diligence, was clearly guilty of criminal rashness and negligence.

That there was contravention of R. 85 (4) of the Orissa Motor Vehicles Rules, 1940, which required the driver of a public service vehicle to exercise reasonable care and diligence in maintaining the vehicle in a fit and proper condition, which amounted, in the circumstances of the case to criminal negligence. Merely because there was an alternative remedy by way of a prosecution for contravention of a rule under the Motor Vehicles Rules, it could not be laid down as a general proposition that the contravention of a specific rule under the aforesaid rules clearly casting a duty on the driver to be vigilant, could not be taken as a circumstance to show negligence or rashness on his part in driving the vehicle though this circumstance must be judged along with other facts and circumstances proved in the case to decide whether he was guilty or not. 16 CLT 181 held impliedly overruled by 17 C L T 39; AIR 1944 Nag 285, AIR 1953 Pat 56, 17 C L T 39, Relied on.

The driver was thus guilty of both culpable rashness and culpable negligence. He was rash in undertaking to drive the truck with such a worn out tyre thereby running a great risk, in the faint hope that nothing serious may happen. He was negligent in not driving the vehicle with due care at slow speed and in not controlling the steering with a view to prevent the vehicle from falling into the ditch even after the tyre had burst. ——S. 304-A — Burden of proof — Duty of prosecution.

The prosecution must prove that the accused was guilty of rashness or negligence in utter indifference to consequences.

After having fitted up the spare spindle to the motor vehicle, the accused wanted to put the vehicle in motion. He was pressed by the coolies in the vehicle to go by the vehicle since they were waiting for two days in the jungle without food and get into the truck. The truck was coming with a slow speed. At the place where the accident took place there being a slope, no driver could keep control over the vehicle. There was proof that the spindle fitted by him was not quite in order.

Held, that the prosecution had failed to prove that the accused was either rash or negligent when the occurrence took place. (1959) 1 O J D 703 ; ILR (1959) Cut 709.

——S. 304-A—Rash or negligent driving.

There is a fundamental difference between criminal rashness and negligence necessary to establish criminal liability and mere negligence or rashness which may involve only a civil liability. In judging whether the driver of motor vehicle was guilty of rashness or negligence sufficient to render him liable to punishment under the section no abstract standard can be laid down. The Court has to judge what is the amount of care and circumspection which a prudent man would consider it to be sufficient having regard to all the circumstances of the case.

A prudent driver should not take his bus along a route which is not his authorised route. When he has taken that route he should proceed at a slow speed, blow the horn when he notices somebody on the route in front and keep the vehicle under such control so as to be able to stop it within a very short distance. When he takes none of the precautions the fact that the pedestrian in front suddenly crossed the path of his bus would not exonerate him from guilt for an offence under S. 304-A. (1959) 25 Cut L T 175.

——S. 304-A—Rash or negligent driving—Test—Difference between criminal rashness or negligence and rashness or negligence giving rise to civil liability pointed out.

In judging whether a driver of a motor vehicle is guilty of rashness or negligence, no abstract standard can be laid down, and the Court has to judge what is the amount of care and circumspection which a prudent and reasonable man would consider it to be sufficient having regard to all the circumstances of the case. (Difference between criminal rashness or negligence and rashness or negligence giving rise to civil liability pointed out.) AIR 1953 Hyd 123 and AIR 1926 Cal 300, Rel. on.

Accused was driving a motor bus. He left the starting station nearly three hours after the scheduled time of departure. During the journey he tried to overtake another bus several times in spite of the fact that a passenger who was sitting by his side in the vehicle cautioned him not to compete with that bus. After reaching the bus stand he drove through a lane towards the police station though it was not the authorised route, mainly for the purpose of reaching earlier than the other bus which had taken the main route. The surface of the road in the lane was rough and uneven and the road was also slipping downwards in the direction in which the bus was proceeding. The accused ran over a woman who was walking on the lane ahead of the bus and killed her outright. He pleaded that the accident took place because the woman who was proceeding all along on the left side of the lane suddenly got confused and ran towards the right side when the bus was almost upon her; and that notwithstanding his desperate efforts to avert the accident by turning to the extreme right the collision could not be avoided. There was evidence indicating that he did not blow the horn though the woman was first noticed at a distance of thirty yards from the bus.

Held that under the circumstances there was criminal rashness and negligence on the part of accused and he was rightly convicted. (1959) 25 Cut L T 175.

——Ss. 304-A and 338 — Prosecution must prove accused guilty of culpable negligence to bring case under sections—Defect in pull and push rod of bus — Meticulous examination necessary to detect defect—Driver is not bound to undertake such examination before driving the vehicle — Absence of evidence to show that defect could have been within knowledge of the driver—Criminal liability cannot be fastened to him. 1962 R L W 281 : ILR (1962) 12 Raj 103.

—S. 304-A—Rash or negligent driving — Inability to avoid collision due to defective brakes—Death of pedestrian—Culpable negligence of driver—Conviction under S. 304-A.

Where the driver of a motor vehicle cannot stop the vehicle in time to avoid collision with a pedestrian on a crowded street, due to inefficiency in the strength of the brakes, the resultant death of the pedestrian must be attributed to the culpable negligence of the driver in driving the vehicle with defective brakes making him liable for a conviction under S. 304-A. (Duty of motor drivers to the pedestrians fully explained.) Case law discussed. 1961 Raj L W 466.

——S. 304-A—Scope—Rash and negligent driving—Collision in centre of road between buses approaching from opposite directions—Brakes out of order—Offence.

The degree of rashness and negligence on the part of the accused required to be proved in criminal cases should be of such a nature that an inference about the commission of a crime may be safely made against him. Simple lack of care which may give rise to civil liability will not be enough for the purpose of establising guilt of the accused under S. 304-A.

When two buses are approaching each other from opposite directions, it is the duty of the driver to observe the rule of the road and to keep to his side of the road leaving sufficient space for the other to pass by safely. Driving a bus when both its brakes are out of order is itself a negligent act. It is the duty of the drivers to drive the vehicles at such a speed that they may be able to pull up at the time of emergency.

Held, on facts that the accident took place due to the rash and negligent driving by the drivers of both the buses. There was a failure on the part of the drivers to observe the rule of the road and that was prima facie evidence of negligence. 1961 (2) Cri L J 561 (562 to 564) (Prs 4, 5, 6) (Raj).

——S. 304-A—Rash or negligent driving — Inference of—Herd of cows coming on road from opposite direction — Accused driving truck on wrong side to the extent of leaving road, and causing death of a boy who was on right side of the road—Accused admitting in examination that he wanted to stop the truck but could not do so — Held, that the fact that he could not stop the truck indicated that the speed was such that he could not pull up at the crucial moment. He should have taken reasonable and proper care when there was a herd of cows and the road was not clear —In the circumstances, it would be correct to hold that the boy was killed on account of rash and negligent driving of the truck by the accused. AIR 1950 Ajmer 45; AIR 1929 Mad 256, Disting. 1960 Raj L W 680 : ILR (1960) 10 Raj 1415.

——S. 304-A—Rash and negligent act — Mens rea is essential—Novice having no license, driving car having no horn and workable brakes, in busy thoroughfare, knocking down a girl passerby and killing her and causing grievous hurt to others, is guilty under S. 304-A and S. 338.

Where the driver of a motor car who is novice and has no license, ventures to drive in a crowded thoroughfare a defective car having no horn and the brakes of which were entirely defective, knowing himself to be still a novice, his act amounts to rashness. Where he in such circumstances tries to overtake the pedestrians and other vehicles which are on the road, being fully conscious of his incompetence as a driver, his act amounts to negligence. In such a case, if a girl passerby is overrun and dies, and others sustain grievous hurt, the driver is guilty of criminal rashness and criminal negligence under S. 304A and commits offences under Ss. 304A and 338, Penal Code. ——Ss. 304-A and 338 — Applicability — Rash and negligent act—Motor accident — Contributory negligence—In driving a mechanically propelled vehicle which has now become an indispensable part of our civilization the driver has most often to take decision in a split second. In criminal law contributory negligence is no defence therefore all that the court has to see is whether the accused acted rashly irrespective of the fact whether the cartman coming from opposite direction also contributed to the accident and judge his conduct by the standard of an ordinary reasonable and careful driver. 1958 M P C 213 : 1958 Jab L J 331 : 1958 M P L J 318 : 1958 Cr L J 1032 : I L R (1957) Madh Pra 357 : A I R 1958 Madh Pra 205 (207 to 209) (Pt B) (Prs 15, 16, 18 to 21) (DB).

——S. 304-A—Rashness and negligence of accused proved to have caused accident — Contributory negligence of victim does not excuse liability — Award of sentence—Contributory negligence, proper consideration.

Contributory negligence in the strict sense of the term has no place in criminal law. Therefore in assessing the liability of a person charged under the section the fact that the victim also contributed a little by his negligence to his own death is absolutely immaterial where there is ample proof that the accused had brought about the accident by his own negligence and rashness. But the little contributory negligence on the part of the victim and the accused's good military record are relevant for the purpose of sentence. 6. Sentence.

——Ss. 304-A and 53 —Causing death by negligence —Sentence.

Sentence is a matter of discretion and the limits cannot be fixed by judicial precedents for all time in the future. The discretion is that of the trial Court. Ordinarily, the High Court will not interfere with the exercise thereof. Yet having regard to the circumstances of the case and the fact that the sentence must be such as to serve as a deterent to others the High Court may, if necessary impose a substantive sentence of imprisonment in addition to the sentence of fine imposed by the trial Court. 67 Bom L R 472 : 1965 Mah L J 669; 1966 Cri L J 400 : AIR 1966 Bom 122 (126) (Pt D) (Pr 19).

——S. 304-A—Severity of sentence depends to great extent on degree of callousness which is present in the character of accused — Utter callousness on the part of driver of motor vehicle in having gone on wrong side of the road, losing control and running over a person who was sitting on extreme end of road and dashing against a cyclist — Accused purely found guilty—Question of sentence is a matter of his discretion — Appellate Court not to interfere when sentence awarded was proportionate to gravity of offence, except upon strong grounds—Sessions Judge reducing sentence for reasons which are not quite satisfactory — High Court, however, should exercise powers of enhancement very rarely — But when sentence is grossly inadequate, it would not hesitate to impose adequate sentence even though effect of enhancement is to send the accused back to jail. 1961 Ker L T 769.

——S. 304-A — Rash or negligent driving — Plea of guilty—Sentence—(Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 32).

If a man is riding a bicycle and is crushed under a motor vehicle in circumstances which cause instantaneous death, there are only two possibilities, either the victim himself is negligent or rash, while the driver is not at fault, or the driver is rash or negligent to a high degree. In the first case the accused is entitled to an acquittal. In the second, the accused is liable to an appropriate punishment. A sentence of a fine of Rs. 25 even though the accused pleads guilty is palpably inadequate and does not meet the ends of justice. 1959 M P L J 856 : 1959 Jab L J 495 : 1959 M P C 614 : 1960 Cr L J 482 : A I R 1960 Madh Pra 105 (105) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

——S. 304-A—Sentence—Duty of Court.

In regard to the sentence the Court must keep out false prejudices in cases of accidents. The difficulty is to keep out of mind the prejudice that inevitably creeps in by reason of the fact that lives have been lost and the responsibility for the same ultimately rests with none else but the accused. This prejudice is bound more or less to reflect on the question of the culpability of the accused and give rise to false issues which tend to cloud judicial vision. The task no doubt of keeping out the prejudice is a difficult one but it has got to be performed. The Court must, therefore without any prejudice award a punishment which is proportionate to the gravity of the offences and to ensure that road-hogs of the description of the accused are taught a deterrent lesson. 1959 Mad W N 67 : 1959 Mad L J (Cr) 31 : (1959) 1 Mad L J 46 : 72 Mad L W 341 : 1959 Cr L J 1344 : AIR 1959 Mad 497 (501) (Pt B) (Pr 20) (DB).

The petitioner was the driver of a truck heavily loaded with timber and carrying 16 passengers. The driver was driving the truck down a ghat road and knocked down 6 curve stones fixed on the left, rolled down into a ditch below and turned turtle killing down six perons on the spot. The petitioner was convicted under S. 304-A, I. P. Code and was sentenced to fine only on ground of protraction of the trial.

Held, (i) that in the circumstances of the case the incident was direct result of recklessness and negligent driving by the petitioner in utter disregard of the safety of the passengers and there was no question of error of judgment.

(ii) that the conduct of the petitioner was callous throughout and his inability to control the vehicle was due to his recklessness and therefore a mere sentence of fine was inappropriate. The undue prolongation of the trial may be a ground for not imposing a long term sentence of imprisonment, but it will not be a ground for letting off the petitioner with a sentence of fine only. 27 Cut L T 146 : 1961 All W R (Sup) 28 : 1961 All Cr R 207 : 1961 (1) Cr L J 300 : AIR 1961 Orissa 45 (47) (Prs 10, 11).

(Penal Code (1860), S. 307.)

1. Scope.
2. "Whoever does any act . . . . guilty of murder."
3. Intention or knowledge.
4. "Under such circumstances".
5. Evidence and proof.
6. Charge.
7. Conviction and sentence.
8. Procedure.

1. Scope.

——Ss. 307 and 351 — Attempt to slaughter and preparing for slaughter—Distinction pointed out—Mere preparation for slaughter of cow is no offence. See U. P. Prevention of Cow Slaughter Act (1 of 1956), S. 8. 1962 (1) Cri L J 7 : A I R 1962 All 22.

——S. 307—Scope.

In an attempt to murder all the elements of murder exist except the fact of death. The cause of the want of success is immaterial. It may be due to timely escape, or the rescue of the person assaulted, the missing fire of the gun or recovery from a wound. Whatever the intervening obstacle to succe ss may be, the accused cannot plead it in his aid if it was not known to him. To sum up, an attempt to commit murder is an act done with intent to commit the crime and forming part of the series of acts which would constitute such actual commission and would be the last proximate act done in the execution of the crime, the completion of the offence being prevented only by some cause independent of the offender's volition.

The nature of the injuries actually caused may often give considerable assistance in determining the intention of the accused, but the intention may be deduced from other circumstances and may in some cases be ascertainted with reference to the actual wounds. 1960 Mad W N 528.

2. "Whoever does any act . . . . guilty of murder."

——Ss. 307, 511, 33—Attempt to commit murder—What constitutes — The act towards commission of murder need not be the penultimate act — Course of conduct adopted by accused in regularly starving person in order to accelerate his end constitutes attempt to commit murder.

A person commits an offence under S. 307 when he has an intention to commit murder and, in pursuance of that intention, does not act towards its commission irrespective of the fact whether that act is the penultimate act or not. The expression 'whoever, attempts to commit an offence' in S. 511, can only mean 'whoever intends to do a certain act with the intent or knowledge necessary for the commission of that offence.' The same is meant by the expression 'whoever does an act with such intention or knowledge and under such circumstances that if he, by that act, caused death, he would be guilty of murder' in S. 307. The expression 'by that act' does not mean that the immediate effect of the act committed must be death. The word 'act' denotes, according to section 33 as well, a series of acts.

Held, on facts, of the case that the course of conduct adopted by the accused in regularly starving the wife in order to accelerate her end came within the purview of S. 307 though it was not the last act which if effective would cause death A I R 1961 S C 1698 and (1910) 2 K B 124, Rel. on; 10 Cri L J 363 (Low Bur) Dist.; 14 All 38, Overruled. ——S. 307—Attempt to commit murder by fire arm —Act amounting to attempt to commit murder is bound to be the last act.

In cases of attempt to commit murder by fire arm the act amounting to an attempt to commit murder is bound to be the only and the last act to be done by the culprit. Till he fires, he does not do any act towards the commission of the offence and once he fires, and something happens to prevent the shot taking effect, the offence under S. 307 is made out. ——Ss. 307, 300 thirdly and 308 — Applicability — Attempt to murder or to commit culpable homicide— Accused after inflicting dagger wounds on victim uttered certain words which clearly indicated that he did not intend to cause death or any injury which he knew to be likely to cause death or even to cause such injury as was sufficient in ordinary course of nature to cause death—Case would not apart from exceptions to S. 300 fall under S. 302 if death were caused and, therefore, accused can be convicted under S 308 and not S. 307. See Penal Code (1860), S. 300. 1956 Cri L J 908 : A I R 1956 Nag 208 (DB).

——Ss. 307 and 326 — Applicability — Attempt to murder—Intention.

Causing injuries, though with the intention of causing death but which do not result in death, does not come under S 307. Section 307 contemplates a case of an attempt to murder. Where the appellant caused with a sharp cutting instrument several injuries on the body of a woman, one of which was grievious in nature, caused on the vital portion of the body which would ordinarily cause the death of a man.

Held, that the appellant was punishable under S. 326 not under S 307. 25 Cut L T 212: ILR (1958) Cut 700 : 1959 Cri L J 313 : A I R 1959 Orissa 21 (22) (Pr 5).

—Ss. 307 and 324—Accused entering the house of A and B to intimidate B to withdraw a case filed by him—Scuffle taking place resulting in injuries to both accused and A and B—No evidence to show that the accused committed house trespass after making preparations for causing hurt or assault — No indication also that the accused really intended or attempted to cause any deadly injury to B — The offences committed by the accused fall under Ss. 324 and 448, Penal Code and not under Ss. 307 and 452, Penal Code and are therefore compoundable. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 345. 1964 B L J R 660.

——S. 307 — Applicability— Accused with his pistol firing at random — Attempt to murder —Held that there was no intention to murder.

Where an examination of facts indicates that the accused was shooting at random for the purpose of frightening his pursuers and would be captors, it is not possible to hold that he had the 'mens rea,' that is, he had intended to cause death, or knew that, in the circumstances, his act of firing was going to cause death, to any of his pursuers. AIR 1933 Cal 354, Expl., A I R 1933 Lah 852, Disting. 1955 Crl L J 1092 : AIR 1955 Pat 330 (332, 333) (Pt C) (Prs 6, 7).

——S. 307 — Act when punishable as attempt to murder.

If a man commits an act with such intention and knowledge and under such circumstances that if death had been caused the offence would have amounted to murder and the act itself is of such a nature as would have caused death in the usual course of events but for something beyond his control which prevented that result his act would be punishable as an attempt to murder. Case Law discussed.

Thus, where the accused fired at his opponents with his gun and firing went on for some time and the distance between the parties was about 35 Karars and no one was injured.

Held, that the reason why the shots missed might have been that the ammunition used was defective or the accused was unable to take the correct aim and since both these matters were beyond his control the offence committed by him amounted to attempt to commit murder. Case Law discussed. 1952 Cri L J 1467 : ILR (1952) Pepsu 258 : A I R 1952 Pepsu 138 (141, 142) (Pt B) (Prs 16, 17).

——S. 307 — Applicability — Assault by several persons armed with dangerous weapons—Death caused by one — Common object to cause murder not established — Held, everyone of the accused persons could not be convicted — Under S. 302 read with S. 149 — Proper section under which they could be convicted was S. 326 read with S. 149 and therefore S. 307 did not apply — Held further that with regard to individual accused who caused injuries to persons other than deceased the conviction could only be for injuries caused — It could not be said that they would be liable to conviction under S. 307. See Penal Code (1860), S. 149. 1957 Cri L J 1307 : AIR 1957 Punj 278 (DB).

3. Intention or knowledge.

——S. 307—Ingredients of offence under—Intention to cause death — Inference of intention — When could be made.

Whoever does any act with such intention or knowledge and under such circumstances that, if he by that act caused death he would be guilty of murder and is liable to punishment under S. 307, I. P. C. It is not necessary for the application of the section that the injury capable of causing death should have been actually inflicted. The intention which brings the case within S. 307, I. P. Code has to be inferred from the totality of all the facts and circumstances of the case which must be carefully examined.

In the present case, the fact of hostility between the two women resulting in a criminal complaint against the appellant, is indicative of premeditation, deliberation, and preparation before the attack. It certainly was not a case of a sudden quarrel or impulse. The knife used for the attack was such as would cause a fatal injury if it had been used to cut a vital organ. The fact that it could not be so used was due to the resistance and struggle put up by the complainant. If extraneous factors, outside the control of and unforeseen by the appellant, had not intervened, death could and was likely to have been caused. In these circumstances, the intention or at least the knowledge of the appellant must be held to have been established sufficiently to bring the case within the purview of S. 307, I. P. Code. 1965 All L J 1121 : 1965 All W R (HC) 829 : 1966 All Cr R 5.

——Ss. 307 and 328 — Scope and applicability—Accused administering small dose of poison (Opium) not capable of causing death — Offence is one under S. 328 and not under S. 307.

Section 307 rather postulates the intrinsic capacity of the act to cause death. Any amount of the intention of the accused to cause death by the act or his knowledge that the act was likely to cause death will not matter unless the act was itself intrinsically or inherently capable of causing death; and the words "Under such circumstances" in S. 307 point this requirement; for instance, poisoned food is given to a person and that person is saved by immediate vomitting the accused cannot escape criminal responsibility; but the poisoning must, at any rate, be of sufficient strength to bring about death in the usual course of events. It would be nullifying the effect of the words "under such circumstances" to hold that even if the quantity of the poison is negligible and not capable of causing death in the natural course of events the offence under S. 307 would be complete if the accused had the requisite intention or knowledge.

Where the accused administered to the complainant a small dose of opium which was far less than the normal lethal dose.

Held, that the offence committed was not one of attempt, to murder under S. 307, but that it fell under S. 328, I. P. Code viz. causing hurt by means of poison. Case law discussed. (1956) 9 Sau L R 307 : 1957 All W R (Supp) 1.

——S. 307—Intention of knowledge.

There should be an intention to murder or the knowledge that the injuries caused would result in the death of the person attacked before a man can be held guilty under S. 307 if the injured persons luckily escape death. The injuries inflicted should therefore be taken into consideration in arriving at the conclusion about the intention of the persons who had made the attack. Two incised wounds on the head and nose which were both bone deep and were caused by spear coupled with severe fractures of bones of other parts of the body do lead to the inference that it was the intention of the assailants to cause the death of the deceased. 1953 All W R (H C) 491 : 1954 Cr L J 68 : A I R 1954 All 59 (62) (Pt C) (Pr 14).

——S. 307—Gist of offence—Intension or knowledge —Proof of.

Section 307 would apply only where the accused had the intention of causing murder and did all that was possible to do so but for some intervening factor death could not be caused although it would have been the normal result of the act of the accused. The gist of the offence under section 307 is the question of intention. It is manifest that the liability of the accused must be limited to the act which he has in fact caused and should not be extended so as to embrace the consequence of some act which he might have done but did not in fact intend to do. In order, therefore, to determine the intention of an accused the Court has to look to various factors, like the nature of the injury caused, severity of the blow or its persistence, circumstances in which it is caused and the immediate motive for the fact, etc., etc. The fact that the accused lowered down the muzzle and aimed only at the thigh and the injury caused was very simple are important circumstances to indicate that he had no intention to murder. 1959 Cri L J 1316 : AIR 1959 J & K 119 (120) (Pt B) (Pr 9).

——S. 307—Intention to cause death—Firing several shots with rifle.

A rifle is a dangerous weapon. If a person fires several shots with a rifle at a person it would ordinarily mean that he wants to kill that person. The fact that the persons aimed at were not killed though the accused was a good shot does not necessarily mean that he had no intention to kill them. A person may be excited and that is why he may not be able to hit properly; or the aim may be missed because the person aimed at may move aside. 1956 Cri L J 217 : AIR 1956 Kutch 1 (7) (Pt E) (Pr 45).

——S. 307—Scope—Intention or knowledge.

Section 307 provides for a punishment for an act done with such intention or knowledge and under such circumstances that if by that act death was caused, the person would be guilty of the offence of murder. Hence, it cannot be urged that the accused could not be convicted of the offence u/s. 307, I. P. C. unless it was proved that he had the intention to cause the death. 1956 Madh B L J (Bhopal) 159.

——Ss. 307 and 326 — Intention or knowledge of causing death—Determination of—Nature of injuries is of considerable assistance — Held on facts that it was impossible to take any other view than that applicant's act amounted to an attempt within meaning of S. 307. AIR 1955 N U C (Madh B) 3736.

——S. 307—Intention to kill person injured—Can be inferred from nature of act done.

To make S. 307 applicable, it is not necessary that the hurt must be caused to person against whom the shot was aimed at. Mere attempt is sufficient and the causing of hurt is only an aggravating circumstance. It cannot therefore be reasonably argued that unless the injury caused is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause the death of the person injured, the inference of intention to kill contemplated under S. 307 cannot be presumed. All that is necessary to establish the intention is the nature of the act done, irrespective of the fact that whether that act is a penultimate act or not. ILR (1964) Cut 730 : 1965 (2) Cri L J 168 (Orissa).

——S. 307—Intention or knowledge.

A man cannot be convicted for an attempt to murder or to commit any other offence, if the evidence discloses that he was rash, negligent or reckless. The word 'rash' and 'rashness' are sometime used to indicate same mental attitude as 'recklessness', although; there is some subtle distinction between them. Intention cannot exist without foresight but foresight can exist without intention; for a man may foresee the possible or even probable consequences of his conduct and yet not desire them to occur; nonetheless, if he persists on his course, he knowingly runs the risk of bringing about the unwished result. A man who is reckless may prefer that the contemplated event shall not happen, or he may not care whether it happens or not; but in either case he does not desire it to happen and, therefore, does not act with the purpose that it shall happen.

Different state of mind from that of inadvertence is needed for criminal liability. A state of mind which amounts to 'mens rea' is that of man who conceives the future event, and believes that there is a chance of its following his volition or act. Text books by Kenny, Austin and Russel referred. 1955 Cri L J 1092 : AIR 1955 Pat 330 (332) (Pt B) (Pr 6).

——S. 307—Applicability—Intention—Proof.

In order to bring a case within the purview of S. 307, it is not necessary that the injury inflicted should in itself be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. This section may apply even if no hurt is caused. Under this section intention precedes the act and not merely gathered from the consequences that ensure. ——S. 307 — Essentials — Mens rea — Principles — Burden of proof —(Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101-104).

The offence is constituted by the concurrence of mens rea followed by an actus reus. An intent per se is not an attempt. It implies purpose and attempt is an actual effort made in execution of the purpose. The attempt for purposes of S. 307, Penal Code should stem from a specific intention to commit murder, and this blameworthy condition of mind may be gathered from direct or circumstantial evidence, including the conduct of the accused. Apart from the necessary mens rea, the actus reus must be more than a preliminary preparation.

Held, that from the mere fact that on being challenged one of the accused had fired two or three shots it was unsafe to leap to the conclusion that the shots were fired with murderous intent. In the circumstances there were equal probabilities in favour of the conclusion, that the shots were fired at random, in order to scare the persons challenging, and in that case no mens rea could be said to have been present. The character and circumstances of this case did not give rise to the inference that the accused necessarily had the intention which the prosecution wanted to make out. The initial burden which is always on the prosecution had not been discharged in this case. Once the first essential as to the existence of mens rea is left unproved, no other element need be looked into. In the absence of unlawful intent, existence of an overt act is immaterial. 1960 Cri L J 393 : A I R 1960 Punj 135 (137, 138, 140) (Ft A) (Prs 14 to 17, 19, 20, 36, 37).

——S. 307—Intention to commit murder can be inferred even if only simple hurt is caused.

First part of S. 307 does not even contemplate that it must be necessary that the victim should receive even a simple hurt. All that is necessary is, that the accused should have the intention to commit murder of the victim or he should have knowledge that he is likely to cause his death. If he commits a certain act with that intention or knowledge and there are circumstances to show that, if he by that act caused the death of the victim, he would be guilty of murder, he may be punished under this section even though the victim may not be hurt at all. The illustration (a) to S. 307 further makes it clear that it is not necessary that the person whose murder is attempted must be hurt by the offender.

It cannot therefore be said that an intention to commit murder on the part of the accused should not be inferred simply because the injuries received by victim were of a simple nature. AIR 1932 Bom 279; AIR 1941 Pat 51; A I R 1944 Sind 83; A I R 1941 Nag 302 and A I R 1958 All 677, Relied on; A I R 1950 Madh-B 21, Distinguished; A I R 1959 Orissa 21, Dissented from.

But if there is no other evidence direct or circumstantial against the accused to show his intention and if his intention is to be inferred only from the injuries, then he should ordinarily be deemed to have intended to cause only that kind of injury which has been actually caused by him. Even a grievous hurt of each and every type caused by the accused cannot give rise to an inference that he had made an attempt to cause murder of the injured. 1962 Raj L W 70 : ILR (1962) 12 Raj 144 : 1963 (1) Cri L J 387 (389) (Pt B) (Pr 17) (Raj).

——S. 307—Absence of mens rea — Use of agricultural implements — No intention to cause death — Offence.

Where the mens rea which is essential to the offence of murder was absent and where the weapons used by the accused were ordinary agricultural implements and did not necessarily indicate a deliberate intention to cause death or fatal injuries, conviction under S. 307 was held not sustainable. 1956 Cri L J 1439 : AIR 1956 Sau 107 (109) (Pt C) (Pr 8) (DB).

——S. 307—Intention or knowledge—Inference.

The intention of the assailant is to be gathered from the nature of the weapon used and the parts of the body where the injuries are inflicted. Thus where the accused has inflicted six injuries by stabbing the complainant on vital parts of his body, it can safely be inferred that the accused had intended to cause his death by inflicting those injuries. 1955 Ker L T 417 : 1955 Cri L J 1535 : A I R 1955 T-C 266 (267) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (DB).

4. "Under such circumstances."

——Ss. 307 and 308—"Under such circumstances"—Meaning of.

The words "under such circumstances" have nothing to do with the question whether the act committed by the accused could or could not cause death, but relate to the nature of the offence which the accused would have committed, if his act did cause death. Both in S. 307 and S. 308 the phrase "under such circumstances" does not stand by itself and it has to be read in conjunction with "such intention or knowledge." Before a Court can hold that the act committed by the accused amounts to attempt to murder or attempt to commit culpable homicide, it should be satisfied that the act was committed with such intention or knowledge and under such circumstances that if it had caused death, it would have amounted, in one case, to murder and in the other case, to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. This means that "intention or knowledge" and the "circumstances under which the act is committed" have to be considered for the same purpose and the only purpose, i.e, to find out what the nature of the offence would have been if death had been caused. Case Law discussed. 1952 Cri L J 1467 : I L R (1952) Pepsu 258 : A I R 1952 Pepsu 138 (139) (Pt A) (Prs 6, 7).

5. Evidence and proof.

——Ss. 307, 149—Evidence – Trial under S. 307/149, I. P. Code—Suggestion that five persons had collected to commit some offence and so accused-petitioner was member of unlawful assembly — No suggestion that Police party was fired upon in furtherance of original common intention—Only evidence to prove that accused-petitioner had common intention of firing on Police party was that he was running along with other accused persons — No evidence to indicate that he actually fired — No gun found on his person—Evidence held was not sufficient to warrant conviction under S. 307/149, I. P. Code. AIR 1955 NUC (Ajmer) 2622.

——S. 307 — Burden of proof — Prosecution has to prove—Accused firing pistol at close range resulting in superficial injures due to defective ammunition—Knowledge—Onus—(Evidence Act (1872), S. 106).

For liability under S. 307 the prosecution has to prove the following facts : — (1) that the accused did an act, and (2) that the act was done with such intention or knowledge and under such circumstances that if he by that act caused death he would be guilty of murder. If hurt is caused by such act, the offender becomes liable to transportation for life, otherwise the maximum term of imprisonment prescribed is 10 years. Thus the section itself does not take into consideration the effect of the act of the accused except as a measure of sentence to be imposed upon him. AIR 1932 Bom 279, Rel. on. 1958 Cri L J 1112 : AIR 1958 All 677 (678) (Pr 6).

——Ss. 307 and 149—Constructive liability — Common object—Evidence of.

An object is entertained in the human mind and it being merely a mental attitude, no direct evidence can be available and, like intention, has generally to be gathered from the act which the person commits and the result therefrom.

Mere words or utterances in excitement are not enough to indicate the real mental attitude and it is the act committed and result therefrom that are the main features, though in every case the result alone does not necessarily indicate the attitude of the mind of the doer of the Act.

Thus, where the simple nature of the injuries indicated that they were not caused with very great force or violence, the motive as found for the assault also did not on probability of human conduct, support the presence of an object of causing death and although there was medical opinion that had the complainant been a man of normal built and strength it was possible that his death might have been caused, it was mere hypothesis and not tangible facts proved on record.

Held, that the common object of the unlawful assembly was to give severe thrashing to the complainant, that is, only to voluntarily cause grievous hurt to him. The conviction under S. 307/149, I. P. Code, was therefore not warranted by law. 1955 Cri L J 1033 : AIR 1955 Bhopal 9 (11 to 13) (Pt C) (Prs 11, 15, 16).

——Ss. 307 and 324 — Scuffle between complainant and accused having pistol in his hand—Shots fired, one hitting complainant — Injury not grievous — Offence held fell under S, 324 and not under S. 307.

In order to bring home the offence under S. 307 the prosecution must show that the accused had done an act with such a guilty intention and knowledge, that but for some intervening fact the act would have amounted to murder in the normal course of events.

Where there was a quarrel between the accused and the complainant but its cause was not known, and while they were grappling with each other the accused who had a pistol in his hand fired shots one of which hit the complainant but the injury was not a grievous one, and there was no evidence to show that the accused had any intention of causing death by firing at the complainant, the offence did not fall under S. 307 but under S. 324. 1960 Cri L J 1080 : AIR 1960 J & K 104 (105) (Pt A) (Pr 14).

——S. 307 — Criminal Trial—Standard of proof required - Court must be satisfied that prosecution story must be true. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 3. 1960 Cr L J 78 : AIR 1960 Madh Pra 11.

——S. 307 — Conviction — Circumstantial evidence raising strong motive and suspicion—Sufficiency.

Complainant in F.I.R. and dying declaration alleged that the appellant stabbed but failed to implicate him in committal and Sessions Court. The Session Judge taking support of circumstantial evidence convicted him under S. 307, I. P. Code.

Held, that the whole evidence only established a powerful motive on the part of appellant and gave ground for suspicion against him. But the circumstantial evidence was not of a decisive character. It did not bring the charge of crime home to the accused with reasonable certainty. The accused was entitled to the benefit of doubt. 1958 M P L J (Notes) 44.

——S. 307—Burden of proof.

To constitute an attempt to murder contemplated by S. 307 there must be some overt act combined with evidence of 'mens rea'. The burden is always on the prosecution to prove, first, the 'actus reus', that is, the accused had done something which in point of law marked the commission of the offence, and, second, the 'mens rea', that is in taking this step he was inspired by the intention to go on to reach a definite objective which would constitute a specific offence. 1955 Cr L J 1092 : AIR 1955 Pat 330 (332) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

——S. 307—Applicability — Prosecution must prove that act was done with intention or knowledge and under circumstances that if offender by that act caused death—Held on facts that charge under S. 307 could not be said to have been brought home to accused beyond reasonable doubt. AIR 1955 N U C (Punj) 3431.

——Ss. 307 and 34—Charge under S. 307 read with S. 34 is sustainable.

The act committed by a number of persons shall in the circumstances mentioned in S. 34 of the Penal Code be held to be the act of each one individual of those persons. Once it is decided that the act is so done by a number of persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, the legal position that results is that each person shall be held to have committed the entire criminal act. Hence a charge under S. 307, read with S. 34 is sustainable in law. Matiullah Sheikh v. ——Ss. 307, 511—Attempt — Meaning of—Charge—Error—Effect—(Cr. P. C. (1898), Ss. 223, 225, 537).

An attempt is an act or a series of acts which necessarily lead to the commission of an offence and stops short of the commission by frustration neither foreseen nor intended. Therefore, when the accused persons were charged of entertaining the object of making only an attempt on human life it cannot be said that the object of the assembly was that they should be frustrated in the commission by some unforeseen event just before the completion of the offence. The charge of entertaining an object of attempt under the law is, therefore, incorrect. But where no prejudice was caused to the accused or there had been no failure of justice the irregularity is curable in view of S. 225 and S. 537. Cr. P. Code. 1955 Cr L J 1033 : AIR 1955 Bhopal 9 (13) (Pt D) (Pr 17).

——Ss. 307 and 337—Conviction under S. 307—Alteration under S. 337 — Validity — Injury caused by shooting — Absence of proof about intention to kill — Inference of criminal responsibility under S. 337—Permissibility — Conviction legal—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 238 (2).

When the accused is convicted under S. 307, I. P. C. for having injured the complainant by firing at him with his shot gun and if there is no evidence that shooting was done with intention to kill or even hurting the victim, the Court is not precluded from coming to the conclusion that the shooting was done in such circumstances as to give rise to criminal responsibility on the part of the accused on the ground of criminal rashness or negligence as contemplated in S. 337, Indian Penal Code. Conviction of the accused can therefore be altered from S. 307 to 337 though no charge under the latter section had been framed. AIR 1938 Rang 220, Rel. on. ILR (1962) 1 Punj 6.

——Ss. 307, 511 — Attempt — What is — Husband deliberately starving and maltreating his wife—Wife on point of death but saved through escape and timely hospital treatment — Husband held guilty under S. 307—Sentence.

An attempt in order to be criminal need not be the penultimate act. It is sufficient in law, if there is present an intent coupled with some overt act in execution thereof. For purposes of criminal liability, it is sufficient, if the attempt had gone so far, that the crime would have been completed, but for extraneous intervention which frustrated its consummation.

A and his mother D deliberately starved and ill-treated A's wife B because B had not brought any cash in her dowry. As a result of the starvation, her health deteriorated. She was not given any medical treatment and not allowed to contact anybody outside the house. One day finding that D was away, B escaped from the house and managed to reach the civil hospital of the place. She narrated her story to the doctor and was admitted as indoor patient. A and D attempted to take B back to their home but were not allowed to do so. The condition of B was serious and it took ten months of hospital treatment to recoup her. A was tried under S. 307, I. P. C. for attempt to murder B by deliberate starving and ill-treatment.

Held that the law cast on A inter alia the duty to provide his wife with food, and medical treatment but he wilfully and deliberately failed to discharge the obligation he owed to her in the matter of food and medical attention though he possessed the capacity, means and ability to perform the legal duty.

(2) That the food was wilfully and intentionally withheld so as to shorten the remaining span of her life.

(3) That it was not a mere preparation, but steps adapted to the purpose intended had been taken. But for the intervention of the fortuitous circumstances of the girl having managed to reach the hospital, the accomplishment of the object was according to the medical opinion, within sight; and under those conditions B was not expected to survive for long. There was therefore no doubt that A had attempted to murder his wife B within the meaning S. 307 I. P. C.

(4) That the sentence of three year's rigorous imprisonment was not excessive having regard to the studied and systematic nature of the attempt steadily pursued for a considerable length of time. ILR (1958) Punj 2319 : 60 Pun L R 563 : 1959 Cri L J 368 : AIR 1959 Punj 134 (145) (Pt C) (Prs 45 to 48).

——Ss. 308, 34 and 325—Number of accused charged under S. 308 read with S. 34 — Who inflicted fatal injury not known — No one can be convicted under S. 308 or even under S. 325.

A number of accused were charged under S. 308 read with S. 34, Penal Code. Common intention was however not proved and who inflicted the fatal injury was not known.

Held, that in these circumstances no one could be convicted under S. 308 or even under S. 325. (Point conceded). 1957 All W R (HC) 149 : 1957 All L J 308.

——Ss. 308, 300 thirdly, and 307—Applicability—Attempt to murder or to commit culpable homicide—Accused after inflicting dagger wounds on victim uttered certain words which clearly indicated that he did not intend to cause death or any injury which he knew to be likely to cause death or even to cause such injury as was sufficient in ordinary course of nature to cause death — Case would not apart from exceptions to S. 300, fall under S. 302 if death were caused and, therefore, accused can be convicted under S. 308 and not S. 307. ——S. 308—Conviction—Grounds.

The infliction of only one of the two serious head injuries could be positively imputed to the two accused but one could not be certain which one should be held positively liable for any one serious head injury and which one:

Held, that while holding the accused responsible for their individual acts it was not open to the Sessions Judge to have considered the cumulative effect of the head injuries and to have held these accused responsible for offence under S. 308. ILR (1960) 10 Raj 1200 : 1960 Raj L W 565 : 1961 (1) Cri L J 155 : AIR 1961 Raj 24 (27) (Pt C) (Pr 10).

——S. 308 — Applicability — Serious head injuries with underlying fractures of skull bone.

Where there are a number of injuries including three serious head injuries with underlying fractures of the skull bone, it could be considered sufficient to bring the case of the accused under S. 308, I. SECTION 312

——S. 312—Scope and applicability.

A distinction is made in S. 312 between miscarriage to a woman "with child" and 'quick with child' as a larger punishment is provided for the former.

Where the pregnancy has advanced beyond seven months from gestation, acts of doctors and nurses which facilitate or accelerate delivery cannot be treated as offences under the section only because the delivery otherwise would have been delayed and particularly when the child is born alive and no injury is caused to the mother or the child. Modi's Medical Jurisprudence. 1955 Cri L J 372 : AIR 1955 Mys 27 (29) (Pt C) (Pr 6) (DB).

——Ss. 316 and 302—Applicability.

Obiter—S. 316 has no application to a case where act attributed to accused has resulted in death of a pregnant woman. 1953 Ker L T 340 : 1953 Cri L J 1551 : AIR 1953 Trav Co 374 (375) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

——Ss. 316, 302 and 71—Sentence.

Accused sentenced under S. 302 for causing death of pregnant woman — Even if a separate conviction under S. 316 is not objectionable separate punishment therefor offends S. 71. 1953 Ker L T 340 : 1953 Cri L J 1551 : AIR 1953 Trav Co 374 (375) (Pt C) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 317—Applicability.

The exposure, as contemplated by S. 317, must be one, by which some danger to the life of the child may ensue. The section applies only where the child is exposed alive. If the child is dead before being exposed, or if the person exposing remains with the child till it is dead, or if the person exposing murders the child and then leaves its body somewhere, a case under S. 317, is not made out. 52 Cri L J 981 : 1952 Raj L W 95 : ILR (1951) 1 Raj 871 : A I R 1951 Raj 123 (124) (Pt A) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Ss. 317, 304 — Child dying on account of exposure—Accused cannot be convicted for offences both under Ss. 317 and 304 (Obiter Per Datt, J.)

Obiter (Per Datt, J.) — Even in a genuine case of exposure, if a child dies on account of the exposure, the accused cannot be convicted for both the offences under Ss. 317 and 304. It is only before the death of the child that the person exposing the child can be convicted for the offence under S 317. If the death of the child occurs on account of the exposure, the accused can be convicted for an offence under S. 304, but not for an offence under S. 317, because the offence under S. 317, becomes merged into a bigger offence under S. 304, Penal Code. 52 Cri L J 981 : 1952 Raj L W 95 : ILR (1951) 1 Raj 871 : A I R 1951 Raj 123 (125) (Pt B) (Pr 8) (DB).

——S. 318 — Ingredients of offence — Evidence of commission of deed or participation in it lacking — Mere existence of intention whether sufficient to constitute offence. 1958 A L J 703 : 1958 All Cri R 518 : 1958 All W R (HC) 761.

——S. 318—Girl consenting to child being delivered to third person or otherwise disposed of — Child living at that time—Offence under section not made out.

Section 318 requires that the child should be dead at the time when participation in its secret burial or disposal should have taken place. If the child was living at the time, and the girl merely consented at the instance of the father to the said child being delivered to a third person or otherwise disposed of, the offence under S. 318, Penal Code, would not be made out. 1958 All L J 703 : 1958 All Cri R 518 : 1958 All W R (HC) 761.

——S. 318 — Girl trying to conceal birth of child — Conduct capable of explanation.

Where the conduct of the girl in wrongly trying to conceal the birth of the child is capable of a number of explanations which might be the offsprings of an innocent intention, the mere fact that she subsequently tried to conceal the birth of the child would not be enough to bring the charge home to her. 1958 All L J 703 : 1958 All Cri R 518: 1958 All W R (HC) 761.

——S. 318 — Case under — Benefit of doubt — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 3) — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 367.

There was direct evidence to indicate that the father of the girl had taken the matter of the birth of an illegitimate child to the girl to heart. He was smarting under a sense of disgrace and was extremely anxious to have the child removed in order to prevent any reflection being cast on the honour of the family. There was evidence also to the effect that the father was actually seen carrying the jhola which contained the dead body of the child. There was further prosecution evidence to the effect that the father had absconded and was still absconding. There was also a clear finding of the trial Court to the effect that the girl had no hand in the murder of the child and was not a party to any such design. Held, that the prosecution failed to bring the charge home to the accused (girl) who was, therefore, entitled to the benefit of doubt. 1958 All L J 703 : 1958 All Cri R 518 : 1958 All W R (HC) 761.

——S. 318 — Applicability — Absence of evidence about concealment of corpus delicti—Effect.

The offence of secret disposition under S. 318, Penal Code, consists in the situation in which the body is placed. Where the evidence does not show that there was any concealment of the corpus delicti i. e., the dead body of the child or there was an endeavour in that direction, one of the ingredients of an offence under S. 318 is not established. (1959) Nag L J (Notes) 40.

——S. 318—Offence under—Ingredients of.

Section 318 is designed to punish a person for intentionally concealing the birth of the child from the public. It punishes a person for secretly burying or otherwise disposing of the dead body of a child and so intentionally concealing or endeavouring to conceal the birth of such a child. Where, therefore, the birth of a child is not concealed from the world at large, no offence under S. 318 is made out. A I R 1935 Cal 489 and A I R 1952 Madh Bha 124, Rel. on. 1960 Ker L J 1497 : 1951-1 Ker L R 49.

——S. 318 — Evidence and proof — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 367.

The same evidence which has not been believed for an offence of murder should not be believed for an offence under S. 318 when there is no eye-witness who can depose that the accused herself came to the Charwada and secretly buried the body of the child there. The fact that she absconded soon after the incident is not sufficient to base a conviction under S. 318 thereon. Even grave suspicion against an accused cannot be taken to be substitute for proof. AIR 1953 Madh Bha 224 (Pr 2).

——S. 318—Intention of concealing birth of child.

When the birth of the child was known to most of the villagers in the village, no inference can be drawn that the disposing of the dead body of the child was with the intention of concealing the birth of a child within the meaning of the expression in section 318. M L R 1952 (Cri) 65 : 1952 Cri L J 1187 : 1952 All W R (Supp) 41 : ILR (1953) Madh Bha 219 : A I R 1952 Madh Bha 124 (124) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 318—Essentials of offence—Secret disposal of dead body necessary.

Appellant's pregnancy was known to all. Having given birth to an illegitimate child, she took it in her sari but witnesses saw one of its legs and she was prosecuted for having murdered it and disposed it of with a view to conceal its birth. She was acquitted of the charge of murder but was convicted under S. 318, Penal Code.

Held, that in order to constitute an offence under S. 318, Penal Code, there must be secret disposal of the dead body of the child with a view to conceal its birth. The appellant might have contemplated a secret disposal of the body but inasmuch as her intention was not given effect to, it could not be held that the offence was completed. 13 C P L R 188, Foll. 1960 M P L J (Notes) 227.

——Ss. 319, 320, 337 and 338—Applicability.

Where though the complainant had to be kept treated in the hospital as an in-patient for 45 days as a result of motor injuries, the medical witnesses stated that after 14 days, the complainant could have been discharged and that after the said period, he was in a position to attend to his ordinary avocation in life, the criminal act of the accused would fall under S. 337 and not under S. 338 as it naturally would have been as the result of 45 days' stay in the hospital. 1957 Ker L T 720 : 1957 Ker L J 673 : I L R (1957) Ker 781 : (1957) Mad L J (Cri) 662 : 1958 Cri L J 33 : AIR 1958 Ker 8 (11) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

—— Ss. 319, 328—Applicability—Bodily pain, disease or infirmity — Administration of poison — Person having reeling sensation and bitter taste—'Hurt'.

The evidence was that there was reeling sensation after one D had eaten the curry served by the accused and he had also bitter taste of the curry :

Held, that this was sufficient to constitute an offence under S. 328 as there was hurt caused to D within the meaning of S. 319. 25 Cut L T 391 : I L R (1959) Cut 662.

——Ss. 320, 326 - Cut on bridge of nose with sharp weapon like razor held amounted to permanent disfiguration.

Where a person causes a cut 1" × 1/2" × 1/2" on the bridge of the nose of another with a sharp weapon like a razor or knife, this amounts to permanent disfiguration even though the internal wall separating the two nostrils is intact. A chance remark by the doctor who examined the person injured that the injury may heal in future if the person puts on flesh or that the disfiguration was not very noticeable cannot take the offence out of the mischief of S. 326. 1949 A M L J 64 : 51 Cri L J 799 : A I R 1950 Ajmer 13 (1) (13) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

Where there was no doubt a deep injury, deep to the bone, but there was neither a cut in the bone nor was there any fracture, it cannot be said that there was any grievous hurt within the meaning of S. 320, Penal Code and in such a case the persons causing the injury can only be convicted of an offence under S. 324 and not under S. 326. 1951 All W R (HC) 107.

——S. 320, Eighthly—Proof.

Under S. 320, eighthly any hurt which causes the sufferer to be, during the space of 20 days unable to follow his ordinary pursuits will be grievous. The fact that a person was in hospital only for 15 days is not enough. It does not follow that he was so ill in hospital to be unable to do his normal duties. 1962 (2) Cri L J 147 (155) (Pt F) (Pr 34) (Manipur).

——S. 320, Seventhly — Fracture or dislocation of tooth — What constitutes — Looseness of tooth not sufficient. 1962 (2) Cri L J 147 (154) (Pt E) (Pr 33) (Manipur).

——S. 320, Eighthly — Grievous hurt — Unable to follow his pursuits during space of twenty days.

The mere fact that the sufferer did not attend to his duty for the statutory period or that he remained in the hospital for that period is no indication of his inability to do so. An injured man may be quite capable of following his ordinary pursuits long before 20 days or over and yet for the sake of permanent recovery or greater ease or comfort may be willing to remain as a convalescent in a hospital, especially if he is fed at the public expense. When the patient is treated in a hospital, the opinion of the Medical Officer attending on him on the point of his disability is very important. It is only if there is such proof that it would be safe to conclude that the injury would come in under the description of grievous injury. 19 Bom. 247, Rel. on. 1951 Ker L T 762 ; 1951 Mad L J (Cri) 634 ; 1952 (1) Cri L J 652 (656, 654) (Pt A) (Prs 8, 9) (Kerala).

——S. 320—Fracture of Bone—Medical Officer stating that there was "fracture of the metacarpal bone of right hand confirmed by X-Ray examination"—Though extent of fracture not indicated, it may be reasonably inferred that it was not a superficial cut on bone, but the breaking of bone itself. See Penal Code (1860), S. 325. (1957) 23 Cut L T 146.

——S. 320—Murder or grievous hurt—Injuries developing into gangrene—Death, natural consequence of gangrene — Offender must be deemed to be responsible for death — Plea of grievous hurt cannot be raised. See Penal Code (1860), S. 300. 1964 (1) Cri. L J 420 ; AIR 1964 Pat 158 (FB).

——S. 320, Fifthly—Injury must actually endanger life to be grievous one.

An injury may be called grievous only if it "endangers life." This means that the injury which is actually found should itself be such that it may put the life of the injured in danger. A simple injury cannot be called grievous simply because it happens to be caused on a vital part of the body, down to the carotid artery, unless the nature and dimensions of the injury or its effect are such that in the opinion of the doctor it actually endangers the life of the victim. 1962 Ker L W 70 ; ILR (1962) 12 Raj 144 ; 1963 (1) Cri L J 357 (359) (Pr 4) (Pr 10).

——S. 320—Grievous hurt.

A cut given by the sword on the vital part of a shoulder cutting the acromion process of the right scapula, the bone being cut through 1/8" x 1/8" is a grievous hurt within the meaning of section 320, I. P. Code. A I R 1937 Rang 253, Criticised; A I R 1942 Pat 376, Dist. I L R (1956) 6 Raj 80 ; 1956 Raj L W 105 ; 1956 Cri L J 270 ; A I R 1956 Raj 89 (DB). (Pt. A) (Pr. 7).

——S. 320 — "Fracture"—Fissured fracture of outer table of skull bone.

Ordinarily, fracture means 'breaking' of a bone. Fissured fracture is one in which there is no displacement of the fragments, and this condition may be caused by direct or indirect violence, usually resulting from a fall or a blow from a blunt object. These fissures may extend far and wide from the point struck, may implicate one or both tables, and not infrequently run down into the base. A scratch on the skin which does not go across the bone cannot be said to be a fracture of a bone within the meaning of S. 320. Both outer and the inner tables of the skull bone may be considered to be bones by themselves and fracture of outer or the inner table by itself can be taken to be a fracture of a bone within the meaning of S. 320. A crack which does not involve both the tables of the skull bone may amount to a fracture of a bone. A fissured fracture of the outer table of the skull bone would therefore, bring the case within the definition of a grievous hurt. ——S. 322—Applicability—Essentials.

In order to determine whether the hurt caused is grievous, the extent of the hurt and the intention of the offence have to be taken into account. The requirement of explanation to S. 322, Penal Code, will be satisfied if the offender had the knowledge that by his act he was likely to cause grievous hurt. Such a knowledge can be inferred from the part of the body chosen for inflicting violence and the severity of that violence as shown by the injuries on the body of the victim. 1958 Ker L T 656 ; 1958 Cri L J 706 ; AIR 1958 Trav-Co 129 (139) (Pr 8) (DB).

1. Offence under, illustrative cases.

——Ss. 323, 302 and 149 — Charge against accused under Ss. 302 and 323 read with S. 149, Penal Code —Conviction under Ss. 302 and 323 — Legality. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 233. 1956 Cri L J 1039 : AIR 1956 All 529.

——S. 323—Applicability — Beating with stick with object of chastisement—No intention or apprehension of death — Offence held to be one under S. 323. See Penal Code (1860), S. 302. 1961 (1) Cri L J 219 : AIR 1961 Andh Pra 79 (DB).

——Ss. 323, 304 (II) and 325 — Injuries caused not shown to have caused death — Case would not be covered by S. 304 (II), or by S. 325 — Accused admitting beating — He can be convicted under S. 323. See Penal Code (1860), S. 304 (II). 1952 Cri L J 1272 : AIR 1952 Assam 157 (DB).

——Ss. 323 and 324 — Applicability—Lathi whether lethal weapon.

The question whether a lathi used by the accused is or is not an instrument likely to cause death is one of fact in each case. Hence when the lathi used by the accused for causing a simple injury is not before the Court and the Court is not in a position to say whether it was likely to cause death the accused should be convicted under S. 323 and not under S. 324. 51 Cri L J 1005 : A I R 1950 East Punj 209 (210) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

——Ss. 323, 304, Parts I and II—Distinction between Part I and Part II of S. 304 — Injury to solar plexus by hitting at it — Death caused by injury — Offence committed is one not under S. 304 but one under S. 323. See Penal Code (1860), S. 304, Part I. 1963 (1) Cri L J 762 : AIR 1963 Him-Pra 18.

——S. 323—Applicability — Illegal custody by police constable—Assault and escape—Offence under S. 323 and not under S. 332 held committed. See Penal Code (1860), S. 332. AIR 1955 NUC (Hyd) 2355.

——S. 323—Applicability—Accused intending injury to one person throwing piece of wood — Piece of wood missing its mark and hitting a boy of seven on his head — Boy dying as a result of injury — Offence held was under S. 323 and not under S. 304-A. See Penal Code (1860), S. 304-A. A I R 1955 N U C (Madh-B) 3884 (DB).

——Ss. 323, 304/34 and 302—Applicability—Accused beating deceased with sticks without pre-meditation —Deceased falling down and later on dying — Injuries sustained simple and caused on scapula back and buttocks —Accused held were guilty under S. 323 and not under S. 304/34 or under S. 302. AIR 1955 NUC (Madh-B) 2113 (DB).

——Ss. 323, 337 and 321 — Applicability — Personal injury if intentionally caused is neither a rash nor negligent act and constitutes an offence under S. 323 —S. 337 applies where hurt is caused involuntarily yet negligently or rashly. See Penal Code (1860), S. 321. AIR 1955 NUC (Madh-B) 48.

——Ss. 323, 304 and 319—Applicability and scope — Deceased receiving only two injuries which were not grievous — Injuries only remoter cause of death — Accused can be convicted under S. 323 and not under S. 304. See Penal Code (1860), S. 304. 1954 Cri L J 6 : AIR 1953 Madh-B 262.

——Ss. 323, 109, 111, 114, 304, Part 2—Applicability Sudden quarrel — Abettor present on spot instigating another co-accused to beat deceased — Latter giving heavy blow on :head of deceased with log of wood lying nearby resulting in his death — Injury sufficient in ordinary course of nature to cause death—Abettor held guilty under S. 323/109, I. P. C. and not under S. 304 Part 2/114, I. P. C. — Principal accused held guilty under S. 304 Part 2. See Penal Code (1860), S. 109. 1962 (1) Cri L J 435 : AIR 1962 Madh-Pra 91.

——Ss. 323, 304 (Part 2) and 301—Doctrine of transfer of malice or transmigration of motive — Applicability—Accused gave a blow with a small stick to a woman who had a small child in her lap and blow fell upon head of infant who died on spot—Intention of accused being only to cause simple injury to woman, he could be convicted only under S. 323 and not under S. 304 Part 2. ——Ss. 323, 334 and 304 Part 2 — Applicability — Young person kicked in abdomen by A, a man of same age—Intestines perforated resulting in death—Nature of offence—A must be presumed to have knowledge that his act was likely to cause death—Offence committed by him was one under S. 304 Part 2 and not one under either S. 334 or S. 323. See Penal Code (1860), S. 304, Part 2. A I R 1955 N U C (Pepsu) 1876.

——Ss. 323, 392—Prosecution under—Warrant under Raj. Revenue Act (15 of 1956), S. 230—Endorsement —Attachment of Cows of B by Revenue Inspector, void—Assault on Revenue Inspector by sons of B — Accused persons having offered resistance to execution of a not duly endorsed warrant could not be treated as having assaulted public servants in discharge of their public duties. See Penal Code (1860), S. 392. 1964 Raj L W 617 : ILR (1965) 15 Raj 166.

——Ss. 323 and 304—Applicability—Accused giving kick to mother-in-law on rear abdomen without knowing she was suffering from fatty heart and enlarged liver —Victim dying — Offence of which accused can be held guilty is S. 323 and not S. 304. AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 4674.

——Ss. 323 and 325—Applicability—Minor beating— Rupture of spleen and death—Accused not aware of enlarged spleen — Offence held one under S. 323. AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 2181.

2. Charge.

——S. 323—Applicability—Prosecution under Ss. 147 and 323—Absence of charge under S. 147—Effect — Only the persons who caused injuries can be punished for their individual acts. See Penal Code (1860), S. 147. 1959 Cri L J 167 : AIR 1959 Andh-Pra 102.

——Ss. 323, 324 and 34—Applicability—Conviction— A tried under S. 324 and A and B under S. 324 read with S. 34 and convicted accordingly — No separate charge under S. 323—Appellate Court holding A and B not constructively liable — They cannot be convicted under S. 323. See Cr. P. C. (1898), S. 236. 1959 Nag L J (Notes) 38.

C.—Acquittal of the accused on charges of unlawful assembly but conviction for specific individual acts under different sections — Absence of separate charges for specific offences in the alternative — Prejudice—Conviction for individual specific offences held proper in the circumstances of the case. See Criminal Procedure Code (1898), S. 233. 1962 Ker L J 792.

——Ss. 323, 325 and 34 —Charge—Several accused—Common intention — No reference to S. 34 in the charge—No questions bearing on this aspect of matter put to any of accused in their examination under S. 342, Cr. P. C. — Each of the accused can only be held responsible for his individual act — There cannot be a case of constructive liability. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. AIR 1955 NUC (Mad.) 3821.

——Ss. 323, 332, 224 and 147 — Charge — Offence committed not in the course of same transaction — Misjoinder of charges — Effect — S. 233 (1) Cr. P. C. could not apply to facts and trial was vitiated by misjoinder—Prejudice has to be presumed when there is a misjoinder of charges or persons. See Cr. P. C. (1898), S. 233. AIR 1955 NUC (Mad) 2415.

3. Constructive liability.

See also Penal Code (1860), Ss. 34 and 149.

—Ss. 323, 325 and 34 — Constructive liability — Common intention—Proof of—Complaint against two accused for causing grievous hurt — No evidence as to who was responsible for causing hurt—Magistrate has to find out that there was common intention to cause grievous hurt—If he does not find such intention established he would not be justified in convicting either of them under S. 325 read with S. 34—Only offence that can be made out would be one under S. 323. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. 56 Cri L J 682 : AIR 1955 All 280.

—S. 323 — Constructive liability — Hurt caused by some one of persons assembled in exercise of private defence of property—Evidence as to individual who caused hurt absent — Everybody of the assembly cannot be made liable. See Penal Code (1860), S. 149. 35 Cri L J 1713 : AIR 1954 All 771 (DB).

—Ss. 323, 325 and 34 — Constructive liability — Common intention to cause grievous hurt—Presumption of.

When several persons combine with the object of judiciously blows upon others with lathis and grievous hurt is caused as a result of the blows thus inflicted, it may safely be presumed that the common intention of all was at least to inflict grievous injury. 1954 Cri L J 739 : AIR 1954 All 358 (356) (Pt A) (Pr S).

——Ss. 323, 149—Constructive liability—Liability of member of unlawful assembly — Mere fact that they did not take part in actual beating cannot exonerate them of their liability for offence under S. 323, committed by other members of assembly. See Penal Code (1860), S. 149. 1958 Cri L J 1798 : A I R 1958 All 778.

——Ss. 323, 147, 149 — Conviction under S. 147 and under S. 323 read with S. 149 — None convicted for himself causing injury under S. 323 — Conviction under S. 323 with S. 149 cannot stand. See Penal Code (1860), S. 147. 1958 Cri L J 711 : AIR 1958 All 315.

[Overruled in AIR 1955 All 282.]

——Ss. 323, 34, 302—Assault by several persons armed with spears and lathis — Constructive liability — Deaths caused mainly due to incised wounds—Accused armed only with lathis could only be convicted under S. 323. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. 51 Cri L J 993 : AIR 1950 All 835.

——S. 323—Applicability—Absence of evidence justifying a finding of existence of common intention. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34 — Circumstances which can justify a conviction under S. 323 only and not under S. 304/34. AIR 1955 NUC (Assam) 1206 (DB).

——Ss. 323, 34, 325—Sudden fight between three accused and three complainants — Complainants found to be aggressors — Accused inflicting several simple and grievous injuries with lathis on complainants—One of accused causing death of one of complainants by a sharp-edged weapon—Who inflicted fatal blow or who inflicted grievous hurts not known —Accused accepting their right of private defence but who exceeded it not known — S. 34 held inapplicable in such a case—Accused held guilty under S. 323 and not under S. 325 or S. 302. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. AIR 1950 East Punj 218 (DB).

——Ss. 323, 34, 325, 326—Applicability.

If a person receives more than one injury inflicted by two persons, but there is only one injury which amounts to grievous hurt and it is not possible to say which of the two accused committed the injury which amounts to grievous hurt, none of the accused can be convicted for any offence other than simple hurt, unless there is material to show that the grievous hurt was caused in furtherance of a common intention to inflict an injury of that kind. AIR 1954 Mys 53 (54) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Ss. 323, 324 and 326 — Applicability — Common object to cause grievous hurt—Grievous and simple injuries caused in prosecution of common object—Conviction under Ss. 325, 324 read with S. 149—Not proper. See Penal Code (1860), S. 149. 1957 Cri L J 1307 : AIR 1957 Punj 278 (DB).

——Ss. 323 and 325—Applicability—Common object to give beating—Hurt to several persons and grievous hurt to one—Offence—S. 149.

The common object of the assembly had been fully established by the prosecution evidence and the circumstances of the case to be that of giving beating to C's party. In prosecution of this common object all the five appellants caused hurt to various persons and grievous hurt to one.

Held, that the offences committed were under Ss. 323 and 325. When an unlawful assembly makes an attack with lathis its members must know that grievous hurt was likely to be committed in the prosecution of the common object of beating. All the appellants therefore by virtue of S. 149 were guilty of the offence of grievous hurt as a grievous hurt was caused by some member of that unlawful assembly. But if it was not possible to hold on the state of evidence in the case as to whether the lathi with which the grievous hurt was caused was such an instrument which, used as a weapon of an offence, was likely to cause death, it would not be safe to convict the appellants under S. 325 read with S. 149, I. P. Code. That proper conviction could be under S. 325 read with S. 149, I. P. Code. 1958 Raj L W 505.

——Ss. 323, 302—Evidence — Benefit of doubt—Case on facts—(Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 220, 537)—(Evidence Act (1872), S. 1) — See Penal Code (1860), S. 302. AIR 1955 N U C (Ajmer) 4758.

——Ss. 323, 325 and 34—Fight between two parties — Both parties receiving injuries — Question of aggression—Evidence and proof.

In a case where the happening of the incident is admitted and both parties have received injuries, the only question which falls for consideration is as to which of the two parties was the aggressor. The nature and number of injuries received by the parties is one of the factors which has to be taken into account in deciding the question of aggression. Where the prosecution version of the incident is not an unvarnished truth, a serious effort should be made to find out the truth and unless the court is unable to disengage truth from falsehood, there is no reason why that part of the prosecution version which is found plausible and reliable in the light of the natural course of events and human conduct, should not be accepted. 1965 All Cri R 474 : 1964 All W R (HC) 684.

——S. 323—Overwhelming evidence showing assault by three accused on a person amounting to offence under S. 323 — Omission to mention name of the accused in F. I. R. and mentioning spot of incident approximately held immaterial—Criminal Trial—Evidence.

Where there is overwhelming evidence in support of an assault with sticks by three accused on a person, amounting to an offence under S. 323 I, P. C., much importance cannot be attached, either to the fact that the name of one of the accused was not mentioned in the first information report or to the fact that the place of incident was mentioned approximately, when the name of the accused which was not mentioned was not known to the person making the report and when the place of incident was not far away from the place mentioned in the report. Madh B L J 1955 (H C R) 1829 : Madh B L R 1955 (Cri) 370.

——S. 323—Evidence — Chain of circumstantial evidence is complete which leads to irresistible conclusion that accused was responsible for murder—Death of deceased by fatal injury—Proof of accused assaulting victim with first blows and kicks though infliction of the fatal injury not seen by eye-witness — Proof of facts and circumstances—Held, that facts and circumstances were only consistent with guilt of accused that he was author of the fatal injury and those were not consistent with any other rational explanation — Since motive for murder was shrouded with mystery, lesser sentence of imprisonment for life would meet ends of justice. See Penal Code (1860), S. 302. (1964) 6 Orissa J D 257.

——Ss. 323, 380 and 147 — Complaint under Ss. 147 and 380 against three accused but summoned under Ss. 380 and 323—Participation of other accused in occurrence was not proved—Charge under S. 380 also not fully established—Prosecution evidence regarding assault was quite convincing as there were no material discrepancies in statements — Charges under Ss. 147 and 380 must fail but accused can be held guilty of the minor offence under S. 323 for their individual acts of assault. 1965 B L J R 278 : ILR 45 Pat 146 : 1966 Cri L J 339 (2).

——Ss. 323, 324 and 302—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 367—Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 5 and 105 — Appreciation of evidence—Principle of falsus in uno falsus in omnibus does not apply in India—Prosecution witnesses omitting to explain injuries on the accused —Accused not entitled to acquittal on that ground alone. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 3, Note 5 (E). 1962 Raj L W 434 : I L R (1962) 12 Raj 481 (DB).

——S. 323—Applicability — Attack by several persons—Evidence not showing which accused caused injury.

Where injury could be attributed only to one of the accused and from the evidence it cannot be found as to which of the accused caused that injury, the conviction of the accused under S. 323, I. P. Code, cannot be maintained. 1959 Raj L W 35.

——Ss. 323 and 334—Conviction under section.

The accused was prosecuted under S. 394 on the allegation that he gave two blows with a stick to G who was moving along the road and snatched away his purse. The accused denied the taking of the purse but admitted of having delivered the blows in retaliation for the blow which G gave him in the first instance. The Magistrate after perusing the statements of the prosecution witnesses recorded in the police diary found them unworthy of credence and framed a charge and convicted the accused under S. 323, Penal Code.

Held, that apparently his plea that he was beaten in the first instance was not correct, otherwise he would have said that he wanted to adduce evidence to prove that fact. Apart from that even if he was beaten in the first instance, it would not justify his beating G and completely absolve him from legal liability unless he did so in self-defence. If he merely took revenge upon G for what G did to him, his act would all the same amount to an offence. Similarly if he acted under grave and sudden provocation he would be liable under S. 334, Indian Penal Code. As there was no plea of grave and sudden provocation; in the circumstances, the conviction of the accused under S. 323 was correct. 1957 Nag L J 184.

——Ss. 323, 302, 320 and 326—Applicability—Boyish quarrel—Accused hitting deceased with granite stone on temple — Death — Injury sufficient in ordinary course of nature to cause death — Offence — Ss. 320 and 326—Sentence—Cr. P. Code, S. 399.

The accused a boy of sixteen years of age and the deceased were students in VI standard. As a result of a boyish quarrel between them, the accused hit the deceased from behind with a granite stone on his right temple near the ear, as a result of which the deceased died some time afterwards in the hospital. First the injury was supposed to be simple, but on post mortem, it was found that there was a depressed fracture and that the injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death.

Held, that the offence did not fall either under S. 323 or S. 302, I. P. Code. It would be going too far to hold, that, under the circumstances the accused knew that the blow was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death or that the injury which he intended to cause was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The only intention that the accused could have had would have been to give a good blow to the deceased as he entertained a grudge against him because of his former quarrels with him. It was clear that the offence committed was grievous hurt falling under the seventh category of S. 320, I. P. Code and considering that the granite stone in question was an instrument which used as a weapon of offence was likely to cause death, the offence fell under S. 326 : AIR 1922 Lah 26 (2) and AIR 1925 Lah 559, Not foll. Held, also that considering the age of the accused (16 years) he was not entitled to the benefit of S. 399, Cr. P. Code. Held, further, that under the circumstances rigorous imprisonment for five years would meet the ends of justice. 1960 K L T 430 : 1960 Cri L J 1213 : AIR 1960 Ker 301 (303, 304) (Pt B) (Prs 9 to 11) (DB).

Held, that so long as the intention or knowledge to cause grievous hurt has not been proved, the offence was only one under S. 323, even though death ensued.    (A) Sections 324 and 307.
   (B) Sections 324 and 326.
7. Conviction and sentence.

1. Instrument likely to cause death.

——S. 324—Instrument likely to cause death—Lathi —When instrument likely to cause death.

The accused was prosecuted for having committed murder of M by causing him hurt with a lathi. However the accused was convicted under S. 324, Indian Penal Code and the lathi used was held to be an instrument likely to cause death. The lathi as per seizure memo was said to have a hole at both ends. Its thickness was approximately one inch.

Held, that the instrument by virtue of its very nature should be such that one could reasonably presume that by its use as a weapon of offence death would be probable. It was something inherent in the instrument which rendered death probable. That being the true import of the word "likely" used in the section, the lathi said to have been used for assault could not be said to be by its very nature an instrument likely to cause death within the purview of that section. The learned Additional Sessions Judge failed to consider the real import of the expression in S. 324 "any instrument which used as a weapon of offence is likely to cause death." 1961 Pat P L J (Notes) 77.

——S. 324—Applicability—Causing hurt with a short sharp-edged instrument is an offence punishable under S. 324 and it is a cognizable offence—Assault on constable while trying to arrest — Offence under S. 353. See Penal Code (1860), S. 353. 1958 Cr L J 541 : AIR 1958 Orissa 69 (DB).

2. Evidence and proof.

——Ss. 324 and 302—Criminal Trial — Explanation by accused—Appreciation of evidence—Duty of Court — Accused is not bound to offer any explanation — Onus of proving guilty is on prosecution. See Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 to 104. (1960) 2 Ker L R 329.

——Ss. 324, 302—Applicability.

Held that though the injuries were individually fatal, it was impossible to ascribe any particular injury to one or the other of the accused and hence neither the conviction of one nor of the other under S. 302 could be sustained. (Conviction was altered to one under S. 324). 56 Pun L R 43 : ILR (1954) Punj 318 : 1954 Cri L J 752 : A I R 1954 Punj 126 (1st) (Pt D) (Pr 29) (DB).

——S. 324—Appreciation of evidence — Principle of falsus in uno in omnibus does not apply in India — Prosecution witnesses omitting to explain injuries on the accused —Accused not entitled to acquittal on that ground alone. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 537. I L R (1962) 12 Raj 481.

3. Charge.

——Ss. 324, 325 and 323—Charge under Ss. 148, 342, 325 and 325/149 against five accused — Common object not proved. — One accused acquitted — Rest convicted for individual acts — Absence of specific charges—Legality of conviction. Held conviction of the accused for offences under Ss. 325, 324 and 323 could not be sustained as they were not called upon to meet those specific charges. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. 1958 All L J 688.

(B) Sections 324 and 326.

6. Illustrative cases.

——Ss. 324, 307 and 326—A throwing acid on B—B's death some days later—Medical evidence contradictory on death being directly due to burns — Held A was rightly convicted under S. 324.

A suspected B of illicit intimacy with his wife and threw acid on him. B remained an in-patient for 9 days and died. The burns were simple and the medical evidence was contradictory on death being directly due to the burns. The remnant of the acid in a bottle produced for chemical analysis as being the same as that thrown by A was reported to be of considerable strength whereas the burns showed that the acid thrown must have been very weak. Identity of the acid produced for chemical analysis was not established beyond doubt with that used by the accused. The accused was convicted under S. 324, but the prosecution contended that he ought to have been convicted under Ss. 302 or 307 and 326, Penal Code

Held, that it was not possible to hold that A knew that his throwing acid on B was likely to cause B's death and therefore was rightly convicted under S. 324. 51 Cri L J 890 : AIR 1950 Ajmer 21 (22, 23) (Prs 7, 9).

——S. 324 — Applicability—Attack by three persons with sticks and one with spear — Death due to all injuries taken together — Offence — Held, accused could not be convicted under S. 302 simpliciter and as S. 34 was not invoked in charges under S. 302 Court was not justified in making each of the accused liable for effect of their co-joint action — But sticks being deadly weapon they were guilty under S. 324. See Penal Code (1860), S. 300. 1956 Andh W R 369.

1. Measure of crime.
2. Intention and knowledge.
3. Constructive liability.
   See also Penal Code (1860), Ss. 34 and 149.
4. Right of private defence.
   See also Penal Code (1860), Ss. 96-106.
5. Evidence and proof.
6. Practice and procedure.
7. Conviction and sentence.

1. Measure of crime.

——Ss. 325, 304 (2) — No previous enmity between parties — 'Marpit' starting over exchange of abuse — Accused inflicting two blows with a light and short stick—Probable cause of death found to be haemorrhage due to rupture of spleen and lung—Evidence that spleen of deceased was enlarged—Offence held to be one under S. 325 and not under S. 304 (2). See Penal Code (1860), S. 304(2). 1952 Cri L J 1165 : A I R 1952 Ajmer 29 (1).

——Ss. 325, 304 and 300, Cls. (3) and (4) — Medical evidence showing that deceased was given smashing blow over head and blows were given with intention of causing bodily injury to him — Bodily injury intended to be inflicted was sufficient in ordinary course of nature to cause death — Held that the case fell under Cls. (3) and (4) of S. 300 and not either under S. 304 or S. 325. See Penal Code (1860), S. 300. 1958 All W R (HC) 12.

——Ss. 325 and 304—Applicability — Test, stated — Accused intended to strike lathi blow at father, C, of about 50 years — Unexpectedly the mother intervened with a child in her lap and blow fell on child causing its death — Held the only reasonable inference should be that had the blow struck C, it would in all probability have caused grievous hurt — Hence accused should have be been convicted under S. 325 and not under S. 304 See Penal Code (1860), S. 304. 1957 Cri L J 336 : AIR 1957 All 132.

——S. 325 — Applicability — Accused following deceased and giving lathi blow on leg — Deceased falling down — Accused giving another severe and smashing lathi blow on head — Fracture of skull resulting in death—Intention to cause death, held must be presumed in circumstances as the attack was deliberate, planned and cold-blooded — Offence falls under S. 302 and not under S. 304 or S. 325. See Penal Code (1860), S. 302. 1953 Cri L J 768 : A I R 1953 All 356 (DB).

——Ss. 325, 304 (II), 323—Injuries caused not shown to have caused death—Case would not be covered by S. 304 (II), or by S. 325—Accused admitting beating —He can be convicted under S. 323. See Penal Code (1860), S. 304 (II). 1952 Cri L J 1272 : A I R 1952 Assam 157 (DB).

——S. 325 — Assault — Victim sustaining injury by fall — Offence under S. 325 when said to be committed.

Though grievous hurt may be caused in an assault, it does not at all follow that the person who assaulted is guilty of causing grievous hurt under S. 325. A person is only liable under S. 325, if he voluntarily causes grievous hurt and voluntarily causing hurt according to S. 322 means if he intends to cause grievous hurt or knew himself to be likely to cause such hurt. Now a man striking another with a rod might have no intention of causing grievous hurt and it might be said that he would have no knowledge that he was likely to cause grievous hurt. In such a case if grievous hurt was caused owing to a fall after the blow, the person guilty of assault might well not be liable for causing grievous hurt. On the other hand, if the nature of the blow was such that the jury could attribute to the person committing the assault knowledge that he was likely as a result of the blow to cause grievous hurt, then the conviction under S. 325 might be sustained. 1952 Cri L J 1013 : ILR (1953) 1 Cal 302 : A I R 1952 Cal 481 (485) (Pt C) (Prs 26, 27) (DB).

——Ss. 325, 34, 302 and 323 — Sudden fight—Complainants found to be aggressors — Accused inflicting several simple and grievous injuries with lathis on complainants — One of the accused causing death of one of complainants by sharp-edged weapon— Who inflicted fatal blow and grievous hurts not known — Who exceeded right of private defence not known — S. 34 held inapplicable — Accused held guilty under S. 323 and not under S. 325 or S. 302. 51 Cri L J 1005 : AIR 1950 East Punj 209 (DB).

——S, 325—Essential ingredient of offence.

It is an essential ingredient of the offence under S. 325, Penal Code, that either grievous hurt should be intended to be caused or the offender should have knowledge that the hurt caused was likely to be grievous. 1963 (1) Cri L J 762 : A I R 1963 Him Pra 18 (21) (Pt C) (Pr 19).

——S. 325—Applicability — Blows on neck resulting in death—Offence.

The accused asked the deceased, his wife to bring hay. She not only refused to carry out the behest but foully abused him involving his mother. This enraged the accused and he gave her two blows with a tehanta, causing her simple injuries. The woman repeated the foul abuse, and thereupon he gave a blow on her back with a danda causing simple injury and catching her by the locks and holding her close to the ground with her face downwards gave two blows on her neck which proved fatal. The deceased was a well-built young girl of 22 years and did not suffer from any extreme and perilous sensibility.

Held, that the blows in question were inflicted on a vital part of the body, i.e., the neck. That being so, the blows inflicted by him on the said vital part of the body must not only have been so hard as to have intended to cause or at least to have known that he was likely to cause hurt which endangered the life of the victim of his assault. There could therefore be no doubt whatsoever that the accused voluntarily caused grievous hurt to the deceased and was therefore guilty under S. 325, Penal Code. ——S. 325 — Accused persons attacking deceased with sticks indiscriminately and one of them hitting him on head — Accused guilty under S. 325 and not under S. 302. See Penal Code (1860), S. 300. 51 Cri L J 363 : AIR 1950 Kutch 2.

——Ss. 325 and 302 — Absence of motive—Cannot be sufficient to quash conviction when there is direct testimony of witnesses who had seen the accused committing crime. See Penal Code (1860), S. 302. 1956 Cri L J 1408 : AIR 1956 Madh B 269 (DB).

——Ss. 325, 304, Part 2 — Accused on coming to know that his son had sold part of his goods in his house behind his back, losing his temper and setting out to chastice son — Son tied to a post and beaten with stick — Beating continuing throughout night after intervals — Beating causing number of injuries all over son's body — Son dying five days later as a result of beating — Injuries not serious — Held that having regard to nature of weapon used and surrounding circumstances, neither an intention to cause death nor any knowledge regarding likelihood of causing death could legitimately be attributed to the accused — Accused held should be convicted under S. 325 instead of S. 304, Part 2. See Penal Code (1860), S. 304, Part 2. AIR 1955 N U C (Madh B) 3879 (DB).

——S. 325—Lawful act of accused resulting in death of boy due to accidental fall of hammer on head — Absence of intention to cause hurt or knowledge that hurt would be caused — Accused held not liable in view of S. 80. See Penal Code (1860), S. 80. (1962) 1 Mad L J 161 : 75 Mad L W 16.

——Ss. 325, 300 — B rendered unconscious by blow from A—Taking B to be dead A hanging B by rope — Death caused by hanging—Offence not murder. See Penal Code (1860), S. 300. 1953 Cri L J 449 : A I R 1953 Mad 239 (DB).

——S. 325 — Causing grievous hurt — Essentials — Intention — Inference from circumstances — When drawn—Sentence—S. 322.

It will appear from S. 325 read with S. 322, I. P. Code that the essential ingredients of offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt are three in number (1) grievous hurt as described in S. 320 must first be caused. If the hurt actually caused is simple, a person cannot be held guilty of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, even if it was in his contemplation; (2) the offender intended or knew himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt; there must be complete correspondence between the result and the intention or the knowledge of the accused; (3) the hurt was caused voluntarily. In other words, the causation of grievous hurt was either in contemplation or was the likely result of the act done.

When the act that the offender did in the process of causing hurt is such as any person of ordinary prudence knows is likely to cause grievous hurt, he may safely be taken to have intended grievous hurt, or at least to have contemplated grievous hurt as likely to occur. The means by which the injury was caused is not the true criterion. The answer really depends upon the nature of the injury caused and the manner in which the blows were administered, whether by fists and slaps or by a weapon.

Thus where in a sudden quarrel between two full brothers one was dashed to the ground and the other, sitting on his stomach dealt him severe blows with his fists with the result that some of his ribs were fractured, his spleen was ruptured, he was rendered senseless and died in some hours.

Held, that though there could have been no intention on the part of the accused to cause grievous hurt to his brother, there was no doubt that from the way in which he assaulted his brother, he should have known that he was likely thereby to cause grievous hurt to him. The offence committed by the accused was therefore causing grievous hurt as contemplated by section 325. Held further that having regard to the relationship between the parties and also the fact that unfortunate incident occurred on the spur of the moment due to provocation given by the deceased himself and also considering the fact that there was absolutely no intention on the part of the appellant either to kill him or to cause him such bodily injury as was likely to cause his death, the ends of justice will be sufficiently met if he is awarded one year's rigorous imprisonment. 1958 B L J R 88 : 1958 Cri L J 1077 : AIR 1958 Pat 452 (455, 456) (Prs 7, 8).

——Ss. 325, 302, 304 — Altercation between parties — Violence — Resulting to death — Held blow to deceased given by accused, in circumstances, did not constitute offence under S. 302 or even under S. 304 — Intention to cause grievous injury under S. 325, alone could be imputed to him. See Penal Code

——S. 325—Applicability — Minor beating—Rupture of spleen and death — Accused not aware of enlarged spleen — Offence held one under S 323. See Penal Code (1860), S. 323. AIR 1955 N U C (Raj) 2181.

——Ss. 325, 329 — Causing hurt to compel person to write off debt or withdraw suit — No offence under S. 329. See Penal Code (1860), S. 329. 52 Cri L J 704: AIR 1951 Sau 40 (DB).

——Ss. 325, 300, 326—Accused inflicting injuries on body of victim in fit of anger — Injuries caused by piece of blunt stick to vital part—Consequent haemorrhage and collapse—Accused imagining victim to be dead hanging body to tree to suggest suicide—Death resulting from asphyxiation—Evidence not disclosing intention to kill when beating started—Accused is not guilty of murder under S. 301, Travancore Penal Code —Offence committed is one under S. 325 and not under S. 326 as strick used is not weapon falling within scope of latter section. See Penal Code (1860), S. 300. AIR 1951 Trav-Co 159 (DB).

——Ss. 325, 304, Part 2—Scope — Blow not likely to cause death — Amounts to grievous hurt even though death is caused. See Penal Code (1860), S. 304, Part 2. 1954 Cri L J 154 : AIR 1953 Tripura 9.

2. Intention and knowledge.

——Ss. 325 and 323—Intention.

To sustain a conviction for causing grievous hurt, it must be shown that not only grievous hurt had been caused but that the accused intended or knew himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt. 1962 Ker L T 868.

——Ss. 325, 323, 302 and 307 — Lathi not a lethal weapon—Knowledge imports certainty, not probability under S. 300 (2) — In the absence of such knowledge conviction under S. 307 is improper. See Penal Code (1860), S. 302. 1961 M P L J (Notes) 290.

3. Constructive liability.

See also Penal Code (1860), Ss. 34 and 149.

——S. 325—Repeated fist blows inflicted on neck of complainant by two accused causing grievous injuries while third accused continuing to press down legs of complainant—Held, third accused was equally responsible for acts of first two accused and all were guilty of offence under S. 325 read with S. 34. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. 1964 All W R (HC) 602.

——S. 325 — Constructive liability — Grievous hurt caused by some one of persons assembled in exercise of right of private defence — Absence of evidence of identity of person causing hurt—All of them forming assembly cannot be punished. See Penal Code (1860), S. 146. 55 Cri L J 1710 : AIR 1954 All 771 (DB).

——Ss. 325 and 34—Common intention — Attack by several persons—Grievous hurt caused by one—Each can be convicted under S. 325. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. 1952 Cri L J 797 : AIR 1952 All 435.

——Ss. 325 and 34—Constructive liability — Grievous hurt—Attack by less than five persons—Person who caused the hurt known — Others, if can be convicted with the aid of S. 34.

If a person is attacked by several persons numbering less than five and grievous hurt is caused, and it is known which of them had caused the grievous hurt, the others can be convicted of causing hurt with the aid of S. 34, Penal Code, provided the criminal act was done in furtherance of the common intention of all. State v. Saidu Khan, 52 Cri L J 131 : 1950 All L J 884 : I L R (1952) 1 All 635 : AIR 1951 All 21 (44) (Pt B) (Pr 139) (FB).

——Ss. 325, 149—Victim dying as result of assault by several persons with sticks and weapons — It can be presumed that common object was at least to cause grievous hurt — Even accused causing simple injuries are guilty under Ss. 149, 325. See Penal Code (1860), S. 149. I L R (1962) Andh Pra 313.

——S. 325—Constructive liability — Common intention to cause grievous hurt and death — Inference of common intention within meaning of S. 34 should never be reached unless it is a necessary inference deducible from circumstances of case. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. 1958 Cri L J 733 : AIR 1958 Andh Pra 380 (DB).

——S. 325—Charge—Several accused — Common intention — No reference to S. 34 in the charge—Each of the accused can only be held responsible for his individual act — There cannot be a case of constructive liability. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. AIR 1955 N U C (Madh B) 3821.

——Ss. 325, 304, 34 — Applicability — Death due to two injuries on head — Witnesses speaking of one blow only—Held, S. 34 did not apply—Each accused was responsible for individual act—There being uncertainty as to who inflicted head injury, accused held guilty under S. 325. AIR 1955 N U C (Madh B) 3725.

——S. 325—Four accused armed with clubs making joint attack on deceased inflicting several injuries—Evidence showing common intention to cause grievous hurt—Death due to shock from multiple injuries —Conviction under S. 304, Part 2 read with S. 34 altered to one under S. 325 read with S. 34. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. ('50) 28 Mys L J 322 (DB).

——Ss. 325, 34—Concerted and premeditated attack—Who struck blow is immaterial. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. (1957) 23 Cut L T 146.

——S. 325—Common intention — Some accused persons simultaneously assaulting deceased — Held, they shared common intention of assaulting with consequential result. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. 1965 (1) Cri L J 73 : AIR 1965 Pat 45.

——S. 325—Applicability — Accused members of unlawful assembly which started beating the deceased and the assembly was armed with deadly weapons—Accused found not guilty of murder — Accused must have known that a grievous injury was likely to be caused and they could be constructively held guilty under S. 325 read with S. 149. See Penal Code (1860), S. 149. 1958 Cri L J 72 : AIR 1958 Pat 12 (DB).

——Ss. 325 and 34 — Attack by several persons — Liability of individual accused—Common intention —Proof of.

Where there is common intention it does not matter whether one or other accused caused a grievous injury and the other only a simple injury — Both of them could be convicted under S. 325 read with S. 34 of causing grievous injury to deceased. 1959 Raj L W 35.

——Ss. 325, 323 and 149:— Applicability — Common object to give beating — Hurt to several persons and grievous hurt to one—Offence — Offences committed were under Ss. 323 and 325 — Held, proper conviction could be under S. 325 read with S. 149. See Penal Code (1860), S. 323. 1958 Raj L W 505.

4. Right of private defence.

See also Penal Code (1860), Ss. 96-106.

——Ss. 325, 146, 141, 149, 34, 304, 323 — Private defence—Right, when comes into existence—Persons asserting their right of private defence of property are doing a perfectly legitimate act and assembly is not an unlawful assembly — Consequently provisions of S. 149 cannot be invoked so as to make every one of those persons vicariously liable for acts of their comrades — In absence of evidence as to who caused hurts, there can be no presumption that lathi yielded by every one of accused must have necessarily struck one or other of injured persons on complainants side. See Penal Code (1860), S. 146. AIR 1954 All 771 (DB).

——Ss. 325, 103, 147, 148, 304, 323—Right of private defence of property — Dispute regarding cutting of sugar-cane crop—Rioting—Each party charging other as aggressor—Title legally with accused under decree had right of private defence—(Tenancy Laws—U. P. Tenancy Act (17 of 1939), Ss 160 (3) and 180). See Penal Code (1860), S. 103. 1953 Cri L J 717 : AIR 1953 All 327.

——S. 325—Dispute over possession of land — Fight — One party receiving grievous injuries resulting in death of one person — Party of accused receiving minor injuries — Plea that accused party was attacked not established—Assembly held not unlawful—Right of private defence did not arise—Absence of premeditation — Conviction under S. 304 held not maintainable. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. 52 Cri L J 209 : AIR 1951 Assam 48 (DB).

——S. 325 — Right of self defence of property or person — When arises — Causing of grevious hurt on grave and sudden provocation. See Penal Code (1860), S. 100. 1958 Jab L J 257.

5. Evidence and proof.

——S. 325—Fight between two parties—Both parties receiving injuries—Question of aggression—Evidence and proof, required, pointed out. See Penal Code (1860), S. 323. 1964 All W R (HC) 664.

——S. 325—Injured attacked by several persons — Witnesses deposing that one accused dealt axe blow —Inability to specify site of impact of blow does not justify rejection of their evidence.

Where a person is assaulted with sticks and other weapons by about 16 persons, the fact that the prosecution witnesses, otherwise completely reliable, are unable to specify the site of the impact of an accused's blow with an axe, in the confusion of the attack perpetrated by so many persons, is not a valid reason at all to reject their evidence that the accused did give the blow. ILR (1962) Andh Pra 313 : 1963 (2) Cr L J 70 (73) (Pt B) (Pr 11) (Andh Pra) (DB) ——Ss. 325, 320 — Fracture of bone — Medical evidence, if must indicate extent of fracture.

Where the medical officer in his evidence has clearly stated that there was "fracture of the matacarpal bone of the right hand confirmed by X Ray examination" he may be presumed to know what amounts to "fracture" and though the extent of the fracture is not indicated in his evidence, yet it may be reasonably inferred that it was not a superficial cut on the bone, but the breaking of the bone itself. (1957) 23 Cut L T 146.

6. Practice and procedure.

——S. 325 — Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 561-A, 235, Illustration (c) and Schedule II, column 8 — Case involving offences under Ss. 367, 325 and 326, I. P. C. —Charge under Ss. 325 and 326 no bar to charge for auxiliary offence under S. 367—Committal by Magistrate to Court of Sessions—Validity—Interference by High Court under S. 561-A. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 561-A. (1962) (2) Cri L J 28 : AIR 1962 Andh Pra 267.

——Ss. 325, 326 and 367 — Accused charged with offences under Ss. 325 and 326 — If can be charged with auxiliary offence under S. 367.

There is clear indication, in the Criminal Procedure Code that a person can be charged with an auxiliary offence when he stands charged with the main offence it self. For example, in. Illustration (c) to S. 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the offence of enticing under S. 498, Penal Code, is an auxiliary offence in relation to the offence of adultery under S. 487, which is the main offence. Therefore, a person can be charged with an auxiliary offence under S. 367, Penal Code, when he stands charged with the main offence itself, under S. 325 and 326, Penal Code. ——Ss. 325, 149 and 34 — Original charge under S. 325 read with S. 149 — Conviction under S. 325 read with S. 34 — Legality — Test — Conviction held valid.

Although there is a difference between 'common object' (S. 149) and 'common intention', (S. 34) both sections deal with a combination of persons who become punishable as sharers in an offence. A charge under S. 149, I. P. Code is no impediment to a conviction by the application of S. 34. The omission to mention S. 34 in the charge does not affect the case unless prejudice is shown to have resulted in consequence thereof. AIR 1958 S C 672, Rel. on.

Held, that though the accused persons were originally charged under S. 325 and at a latter stage a charge under S. 149, I. P. Code was added, having regard to the circumstances and evidence in the case there was no illegality in the matter of conviction of the accused under S. 325 with S. 34, I. P. Code. 1961 (1) Cri L J 625 (626) (Pr 5) (Assam).

——S. 325—Conviction—Sudden fight—Participation by large number of persons.

If a large number of persons participated in a sudden fight arising from a land dispute, it would be really difficult for any one to state that any particular injury was caused by a particular person. Where the accused was mentioned as one of the assailants of the deceased in the F. I. 9. Practice and procedure.

1. Effect of amendment of 1955.

——S. 326 — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 28, 29, 30 — Amendment of S. 30 by Act 26 of 1955 — Effect on powers of magistrate under S. 28—Not precluded from trying offences under S. 326, I. P. C. — See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 28. 1959 Cri L J 361 : AIR 1959 Punj 98 (DB).

——S. 326 — Jurisdiction — Power of First Class Magistrate to try — Offence under—Effect of amendment by Act 26 of 1955, stated — See Criminal P. C. (1898) (as amended by Act 26 of 1955), S. 28. 1958 Cri L J 800 : AIR 1958 Punj 214.

2. Scope and applicability.

——S. 326—Applicability—Hurt by axe on head.

A blow on the head with an axe which penetrates half an inch into the head is likely to endanger life. 1955 Cr L J 572 : 1955 Mad W N 161 : (1955) 1 S C R 1083 : 1955 S C A 228 : 1955 All W R (Sup) 34 : 1955 S C J 106 : A I R 1955 S C 216 (223) (Pt F) (Pr 36).

——Ss. 326, 324, 307 — A throwing acid on B—B's death some days later — Medical evidence contradictory on death being directly due to burns—Held A was rightly convicted under S. 324—See Penal Code (1860), Ss. 324, 307. 51 Cri L J 905 : A I R 1950 Ajmer 21.

——Ss. 326 and 320 — Cut on bridge of nose with sharp weapon like razor held amounted to permanent disfiguration—Offence under S. 326—See Penal Code (1860), S. 320. 51 Cri L J 799 : AIR 1950 Ajmer 13 (1).

——Ss. 326, 300, 4thly Illus. (d), 302 — Accused firing with revolver near the ground where there was a group of persons—No premeditation or intention or knowledge of likelihood of causing death proved—Accused held guilty under S. 326 and not under S. 302 — See Penal Code (1860), S. 300. ILR (1959) Andh Pra 797.

——Ss. 326, 324 — Applicability — Spear thrust in chest causing punctured wound extending only up to pleural cavity — No injury caused to pleura or lungs or any other vital organ—Proper section applicable is S. 324 and not S. 326—See Penal Code (1860), S. 324. 1963 (2) Cri L J 255 : A I R 1963 Assam 151 (DB).

——S. 326 — Applicability — Cutting of fingers and fracture caused in rioting—Injuries constitute grievous hurt. AIR 1955 N U C (Bom) 5867 (DB).

——S. 326 — Applicability — Accused having sticks, one of them being ironringed — 21 blows given, some of them being on vital parts but only two injuries fatal—Offence committed held was one under S. 326. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. 1961 (1) Cri L J 251 : AIR 1961 Guj 16 (DB).

——S. 326 — Accused attacking persons with sharp chopper on heads and necks and causing major—injuries — Victims treated in hospital for not longer than four or five days — Offence is attempt to commit murder.

Where it was estabiliseed that P. W. 8 was hit with a chopper by the accused on the head and shoulder, P. W. 13 was hit on the shoulder, the head and left hand and left knee. P. W. 14 was hit on the head and neck, P. W. 15 was hit on the head and P. W. 16 was given three blows, one on the head, one on the neck and one on the right hand and the injuries were not minor injuries. The offence committed was one under S. 326 Penal Code, notwithstanding the fact that the persons attacked were in the hospital for not longer than four or five days. Chopper is an extremely dangerous weapon. When a person uses a sharp chopper upon the neck or head of another and delivers blows with it, it is only reasonable to say that his intention was to kill him, and the accused could rightly be found guilty of the offence of attempt to commit murder of those five persons. (1965) 2 Mys L R 699 (DB).

——Ss. 326 and 307 — Applicability—Causing grievous injuries not resulting in death — Offence held under S. 326 and not under S. 307 — See Penal Code (1860), S. 307. 1959 Cri L J 213 : A I R 1959 Orissa 21.

——Ss. 326, 300, 325—Accused inflicting injuries on body of victim in fit of anger — Injuries caused by piece of blunt stick to vital part—Consequent haemorrhage and collapse — Accused imagining victim to be dead hanging body to tree to suggest suicide—Death resulting from asphyxiation—Evidence not disclosing intention to kill when beating started — Accused is not guilty of murder under S. 301, Travancore Penal Code — Offence committed is one under S. 325 and not under S. 326 as stick used is not weapon falling within scope of latter section—See Penal Code (1860), S. 300. 52 Cri L J 871 : AIR 1951 Trav-Co 159.

3. Intention or knowledge.

——Ss. 326 and 302 — Intention to kill—Inference—Throwing of acid on deceased—Offence—Sentence.

Although S. 326 provided for injury by corrosive substance, the nature of corrosive substance and quantity of it and result following from it have always to be the determining factors in finding out whether or not the act complained of was likely to cause death — See Penal Code (1860), S. 302. ILR (1958) 2 All 698.

——S. 326—Intention or knowledge of causing death—Determination of indicated—See Penal Code (1860), S. 307. AIR 1955 N U C (Madh B) 3736.

——S. 326 — Intention — Two parties determined to fight to enforce their right — Intention of accused party should be ascertained — See Penal Code (1860), S. 304. AIR 1955 N U C (Madh B) 2100 (DB).

——S. 326 — Intention or knowledge—Single stab in chest — Death not definitely traceable to injury — Nature of offence — Held, accused could not be convicted either under S. 304 or under S. 326—Proper section under which he could be convicted was S. 324 — See Penal Code (1860), S. 299. AIR 1955 N U C (Trav.Co) 5429 (DB).

4. Fracture.

——Ss. 326, 324 and 320 — Fracture — Injuries on head going deep to skull bone and also cutting to some extent skull bone but not extending to inner surface of it — No fracture and as such no grievous hurt within S. 320 — Offence falls under S. 324 and not S. 326. See Penal Code (1860), S. 320. 1951 All W R (H C) 107.

——Ss. 326, 320—Fracture — Mere scratch caused to the bone by a cut cannot be deemed a fracture— But a cut in the bone to a depth of ½" amounts to a fracture and grievous injury even though the crack does not extend to the inner side of the bone. See Penal Code (1860), S. 320. 1965 (1) Cri L J 48 : AIR 1965 Mad 10.

5. Constructive liability.

See also Penal Code (1860), Ss. 34 and 149.

——Ss. 326, 149 — Unlawful assembly — Common object to cause grievous hurt — One member only causing death — Others can be convicted under S. 326/149 even though no one member has caused grievous hurt. AIR 1923 Pat 50 and AIR 1946 Pat 242, Overruled. See Penal Code (1860), S. 149. 1960 Cri L J 1144 : AIR 1960 S C 725.

——Ss. 326, 34, 302 — Rioting with guns and other deadly weapons resulting in deaths — Deceased sustaining gunshot and other fatal injuries — Accused charged under S. 302 read with S. 34 — Conviction should be under S. 302 read with S. 34 even if there was no evidence to prove who caused fatal injury— Conviction under S. 326 read with S. 34 not proper. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. 1961 (1) Cri L J 42 : AIR 1961 Andh-Pra 23 (DB).

——S. 326—Applicability — Attack by three persons with sticks and one with spear — Death due to all injuries taken together — Held on facts that it was impossible to convict any one of the accused of murder simpliciter under S. 302 — Fourth accused alone being responsible for an incised wound resulting in a grievous hurt was punishable under S. 326. See Penal Code (1860), S. 300. 1956 Andh W R 369.

——Ss. 326/34 and 302/34—Offence under.

When the evidence fell short of showing that the two accused had entered into a plan to bring about the murder and it was impossible for accused A to appreciate or realise the weight and magnitude of the strokes which were being inflicted by the other accused B, it could not be held that A had the intention of committing the murder or he knew that B had the intention of murdering the deceased. He could not therefore be convicted under S. 302/34. But since there were other injuries also which by themselves could prove fatal, the offence could not be less than an offence under S. 326/34. 1953 Cri L J 1809 : AIR 1953 Pat 394 (399) (Pt D) (Pr 14) (DB).

——Ss. 326/149, 147, 148, 302 — Rioting — Common object to assault deceased not established — One of accused guilty of murder and convicted under S. 302 —Others held could not be convicted under Ss. 147, 148 and 326/149. See Penal Code (1860), S. 147. 51 Cri L J 331 : AIR 1950 Pat 44.

——S. 326— Applicability — Assault by several persons armed with dangerous weapons — Death caused by one — Common object to cause murder not established—Offence — Held, every one of the accused could not be convicted under S. 302 read with S. 149 —Proper section under which they could be convicted was S. 326 read with S. 149. See Penal Code (1860), S. 149. 1957 Cri L J 1307 : AIR 1957 Punj 278.

——Ss. 326, 323 and 324—Unlawful assembly—Common object—Grievous and simple injuries caused in prosecution of common object—Conviction for Ss. 323, 324 read with S. 149—Not proper. See Penal Code (1860), S. 149. 1957 Cri L J 1307 : A I R 1957 Punj 278.

6. Evidence and proof.

——S. 326—Trial under Ss. 304/326, Penal Code — Evidence of prosecution witnesses that there was ill feeling between accused and his victims—Motive for assaulting and causing injuries held was apparent and the existence of motive lend additional support to the finding of guilt. ILR (1963) 15 Assam 552.

——S. 326 — Accused held, on evidence, not guilty under S. 302 but under S. 326. See Penal Code (1860), S. 302. M B L J 1956 H C R 534.

——Ss. 326, 300, 149—Absence of Evidence of doctor or post-mortem certificate—Not possible for Court to infer whether injury in question to skull would have been sufficient in the ordinary course to cause the death — Conviction of accused only for offence of causing grievous injury with deadly weapon, considered safe. See Penal Code (1860), S. 300. (1964) 1 Mys L J 393.

——S. 326—Applicability—Causing burns by acid—Absence of expert medical evidence — Nature of burns and acid not known — Offence — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 367, 509 — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 45).

The accused was charged under S. 326, I. P. Code for causing grievous hurt on the deceased by throwing some acid on him, when he was asleep. The deceased was taken to the hospital and discharged after about four months and was again admitted to the hospital where he remained for about seven months till death. The death was reported to the Police after about a month. The Medical Report showed "heart failure" as the cause of death. The bed ticket did not indicate the nature of burns or the acid used, though the scrappings of clothes and some liquid from bottle which was alleged to have been used for pouring acid, were available for chemical examination. The investigating officer did not care to examine finger-prints on the bottle. There was no expert evidence, on the cause of death, nature of acid used, symptoms of the burn and finger-prints on the bottle. There was no post-mortem examination.

Held, that considering the lamentable omissions in and the irresponsible nature of investigation it was not proved beyond all possibility of reasonable doubt that the accused caused grievous hurt to the deceased by any corrosive substance. (1958) 24 Cut L T 241.

——S. 326—Proof—Unjustified attack—Evidence.

In order to believe a story of an apparently unjustified attack it must be supported by unambiguous and unimpeachable evidence. 1954 Cri L J 1546: 1954 B L J R 23 : AIR 1954 Pat 483 (484) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

——Ss. 326, 34 and 149—Evidence Act (1872), S. 3—Dispute between adjoining landholders regarding channel — Attack by one party with spades and shovels - One person injured seriously — No eye witness as to who inflicted injuries — Conviction based on circumstantial evidence — Test of sufficiency — Accused held guilty under S. 326 read with S. 34.

To convict an accused on the basis of circumstantial evidence, the circumstances must be inconsistent with any other conclusion except the guilt of the accused.

Thus where the circumstances proved were (1) presence of accused persons with spades and shovels on the land of the complainant, (2) dispute between the parties about the channel, (3) various injuries on the person of one person on the side of the complainant to which he ultimately succumbed and (4) bloodstains on clothes of accused No. 1 and his spade.

Held that accused No. 1 was guilty of an offence under S. 326 read with S. 34, I. P. C. but as it could not be said whether he was attacked by all the five accused, his conviction under S. 326 read with S. 149 could not stand. 8 Sau L R 217.

——S. 326—Punishment — Public servant injured by accused with axe while performing his duty—Accused unusually excitable and poor villager — Whether mitigating circumstances.

Where the accused causes injury with an axe to a public servant resulting in his death while he was performing his duty in order presumably to prevent him from prosecuting an enquiry against the brother of the accused.

Held that the sentence of 3 years' R. I. for the accused was grossly inadequate. The fact that the accused was an unusually excitable and pugnacious individual could not be a ground for imposing such an inadequate sentence looking to the gravity of the offence.

That he took offence against the conduct of the public servant who was performing his duty could evidently not be regarded as constituting any provocation to the accused which justified him in causing the injury which resulted in the public servant's death. That the accused was a poor villager and belonged to a backward class also could not be a justification for this grossly inadequate sentence. 1956 Cri L J 479 : A I R 1956 Bom 193 (195) (Pt C) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 328—Dhatura administrated by accused causing pain in stomach — Accused to be credited with knowledge to cause hurt—Offence is punishable under S. 328, Indian Penal Code.

Held, on facts that according to Modi's Medical Jurisprudence and Texicology (XIII Edn.) page 625, the seeds of dhatura were reputed to have an aphrodiasiac property. It was also sometimes given as a Love Philter. It might, therefore, be that the dhatura in the instant case might have been administered by the appellant to her husband not with intent to cause hurt to him but as a Love Philter or as an aphrodiasiac. It could not, however, be controverted that knowing dhatura to be poison, one, who administered it to another in quantities which caused burning pain in the stomach, should be credited with knowledge that such administration was likely to cause hurt. The conviction of the appellant under S. 328 of the Penal Code was maintained. 1963 MPLJ (Notes) 88.

——S. 328—Conviction — Circumstantial evidence—Sufficiency—Offence under S. 328 — Essentials to be proved, indicated—Suspicion not sufficient. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 3. 1957 Jab L J 841.

——Ss. 329, 325—Causing hurt to compel person to write off debt or withdraw suit — No offence under S. 329.

It is constraining the person to do an illegal act which is made punishable under S. 329 and even if the person was constrained to write off the debt or to withdraw the suit by improper means, the action itself, viz., the writing off or the withdrawal of the claim not being an illegal thing, the bringing about of that action by causing grievous hurt will not contravene the provisions of S. 329. The offence in such case falls under S 325. 52 Cri L J 704: AIR 1951 Sau 40 (41) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

——S. 330—Police Officers subjecting suspect to torture with a view to extract confession – Death of suspect in course of torture due to fracture of odoutoid process of second cervical vortabrae and medullary compression — No intention or knowledge of causing death or grievous hurt — Conviction under S. 330 held justified. ——S. 330/511—Sentence.

The accused in order to extort confession from a boy who was suspected of having committed theft, brought together his hands, wrapped pieces of cloth round the hands, poured kerosene oil over the wrapping and set fire to it. As a result the boy's hands were burnt and he had to remain an in-patient in the hospital for 12 days. The accused was convicted under S. 330, read with S 511, Penal Code and sentenced to imprisonment till rising of the Court.

Held, that the sentence imposed upon the accused was grossly disproportionate to the gravity of the case. (The sentence was enhanced to one year's rigorous imprisonment). 1955 Mad W N 252 (2) : 68 Mad L W 236 : 1955 Cri L J 1080 : (1955) 2 Mad L J 651 : AIR 1955 Mad 424 (424) (Pr 3).

——Ss. 332, 353 — Expression, 'in consequence' — Scope of — Beating given to public servant in consequence of anything done by him in discharge of duty —S. 332 is attracted — Causing of hurt is not necessary.

While framing a charge under S. 332 it is not essential that the hurt should be caused to the public servant while he is actually discharging his official duty. If a beating is given in consequence of anything done by him in the discharge of his duties as a public servant, then it is sufficient to attract the application of S. 332. The expression 'in consequence' used in S. 332 and S. 353 includes the motive which actuates the accused to cause voluntary hurt or assault to a public servant. 1963 Raj L W 468 : ILR (1963) 13 Raj 999 : 1964 (1) Cri L J 254 (255) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (Raj).

——Ss. 333, 323 and 149—Trial by jury—Legality—Trial of offences under S. 323 read with S. 149 and S. 333 read with S. 149 should be with aid of assessors and not by jury—If however these offences were tried by a jury it remained a trial with aid of jury—In view of S. 536, Cr. P. C, it would not be considered to be illegal. See Penal Code (1860), S. 149. 1954 Cri L J 1424 : AIR 1954 All 680.

——Ss. 333, 104 — Forest Act (1927), S. 52 — Forest guard attempting to snatch away axe from trespasser who was chopping wood from Government forest—Trespasser inflicting injuries on Forest guard is guilty under S. 333.

A forest guard who was attempting to snatch the axe with which the accused was chopping wood in Government forest was injured by him with the axe. In his trial under S. 333 the accused pleaded that it was not established that the forest was notified as reserved forest and the forest guard had no authority to seize the axe, but only to seize chopped wood under S. 52 of the Forest Act.

Held, that the forest guard had the right to prevent wood being chopped in the forest which became Government forest under the M. P. Abolition of Proprietary Rights Act and the accused was guilty under S. 333, Indian Penal Code. 1962 Jab L J 857 : 1962 M P L J (Notes) 318 : 1963 (2) Cri L J 95.

——Ss. 333, 332, 395 — Assistant Sub-Inspector of Punjab State coming with staff to village in Rajasthan for investigation of case in Punjab — Search and seizure of properties of accused by assistant sub-Inspector held to be without jurisdiction — Police party held not to have acted in good faith — Right of private defence held, however, not available to accused under circumstances of case—Offence under S. 395, held not proved—Convictions under Ss. 332, 333 upheld. See Penal Code (1860), S. 52. 1964 Raj L W 126.

——Ss. 333, 34, 97, 99, 325—Applicability—Right of private defence of property—Exceeding the right—Held that as the complainant had no lawful right to chase cattle into field of accused, the accused had a right of private defence of their property, but they had exceeded that right when they continued to beat him when cattle had been rescued. See Penal Code (1860), S. 34. 1959 Cri L J 770 : AIR 1959 Raj 124.

——S. 334—Applicability.

Held, that the Magistrate had approached the matter absolutely wrongly. Instead of considering the prosecution evidence he merely considered objection by accused that the prosecuting witnesses not being of the same locality should not be believed. The Magistrate gave his reasons for not relying on the defence evidence and proceeded to say that since it was the complainant who had gone to prevent the accused from construction of building, the offence committed was one under S. 334. All this exhibited a lack of adequate knowledge as regards circumstances under which S. 334 could be used and the way in which a criminal case ought to be approached. ——Ss. 334 and 323 — Scope — Prosecution under S. 394 — If accused acted under grave and sudden provocation he would be liable under S. 334—As there was no plea of grave and sudden provocation, in the circumstances, the conviction under S. 323 was correct. See Penal Code (1860), S. 323. 1957 Nag L J 184.

——S. 334—Applicability — Young person kicked in abdomen by A, a man of same age — Intestines perforated resulting in death—Nature of offence—A must be presumed to have knowledge that his act was likely to cause death—Offence committed by him was one under S. 304, Part 2 and not one under either S. 334 or S. 323. ——Ss. 336, 304-A, 279, 280, 337 and 338 — Offences defined by Ss. 279, 280, 336, 337 and 338 can be viewed as minor offences included within S. 304-A—Accused once convicted under S. 304-A cannot be convicted under S. 279 for minor offence. See Penal Code (1860), S. 304-A. 1965 (1) Cri L J 524 : AIR 1965 All 196.

——S. 336—Rash and negligent act — What is—Act done intentionally and deliberately is not such act.

Where a person commits a wanton or dangerous act with the knowledge that it is so and he commits it without knowing that it may probably cause injury or without the intention of causing it, it will be a rash act. The person committing the act in such a case does not know that the result of his recklessness or negligence may probably cause injury to somebody he never intends that such an injury would be caused. It may be negligent act, when a person is negligent as to the consequences of his act and there is a failure on his part to take reasonable and proper care and precaution to guard against injury to somebody else. Where however, a person commits an act with the intention of causing an injury to somebody else it is an intentional act done with consideration and will and therefore, amount to a rash and negligent act. Both in the case of intentional as well as rash and negligent acts, the fact that the act may endanger human life or the safety of others may be a common factor. But that by no means is the decisive factor. Where the accused intentionally pelted a stone at the complainant after abusing him but the stone missing its target hit the front wheel of the complainant's van, the act does not amount to a rash and negligent act within the meaning of S. 336, I.P.C. and the charge and conviction of the accused under that section cannot be sustained. 33 Pat 1006 and AIR 1928 All 745 and AIR 1925 All 396 and AIR 1937 Rang 273 and A I R 1926 Cal 300 and 3 All 776, Relon. 67 Bom L R 223 : 1965 Mah L J 411 : I L R (1965) Bom 519 : 1966 Cr L J 7 : A I R 1966 Bom 13 (15) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

——S. 336 — Essentials of offence — Throwing of stones of size of pice—Offence.

For an act to be an offence under S. 336 of the Penal Code, it must be such as will endanger the life of a person or the personal safety of others. Throwing of stones not bigger than the size of a pice does not bring the act of the person under S. 336, I. P. C. 1958 Nag L J (Notes) 11.

——Ss. 336 and 352 — Conviction under S. 336—Alteration into one under S. 352—Legality—Absence of charge—Effect.

It is one thing to say that no act was rash and negligent and it is another thing to say that it was such as to create apprehension in the mind of another. Therefore, in the absence of a charge in the alternative under section 352, the conviction under S. 336 cannot be altered to one under section 352, Indian Penal Code. 1958 N L J (Notes) 11.

——S. 336—Applicability— No allegation of rashness or negligence in first information report—Offence.

Where in the first information report the complainant stated that he was given a beating with the butt end of a khanda after being carried into the Math of the accused and that he came away running and it was further stated that the cycle of his companion was also broken with the Khanda :

Held, that there was absolutely no allegation in the first information report to make out a case under S. 336, neither rashness not negligence being stated anywhere in the report. 23 Cut L T 88 : 1957 Cr L J 769 : A I R 1957 Orissa 130 (143) (Pt I) (Pr 33) (DB).

——Ss. 336, 337 and 352— Accused convicted under Ss. 336 and 337 for causing hurt to complainant — Evidence showing act to be deliberate—Accused held could be convicted under S. 352 rather than under S. 336 or S. 337 notwithstanding absence of charge— Offence under S. 352 triable exclusively by Bench of Gram Kutchery—Magistrate having initially jurisdiction can try offence under S. 352. ——S. 336 — Rash act—Deliberate stone throwing is not a rash act. AIR 1955 N U C (Pat) 1438.

——S. 336—'Rashly'—Meaning of—Drunken person firing in air on seeing complainants during night — Act is both rash and negligent—Guilty under S. 336.

The phrase 'rashly' means something more than mere inadvertence or inattentiveness or want of ordinary care. A person who acts rashly shows indifference to obvious consequences and to the rights of others, and does not mind whether a danger would result or not, A rash act is indicative of disregard of consequences.

Whether the accused who were drunk started firing in the air on seeing the complainants coming in a jeep at about 8-30 p. m. in the night and the complainants had to take shelter behind the jeep.

Held, that as the accused were drunk their act of firing in the dark was both rash and negligent and was covered by the ingredients of the offence under S. 336. ILR (1963) 2 Punj 611 : 1963 (2) Cr L J 718 (Punj).

——Ss. 337, 427—Rash and negligent driving leading to collision causing hurt to person on road—Conviction of driver under S. 337 proper—Conviction under S. 427, illegal.

Where the applicant's rash and negligent driving of his lorry has led to a collision as a result of which hurt is caused to a person sitting in a jeep the applicant can be properly convicted under S. 337 although the hurt was not caused knowingly. The word 'voluntarily' is not used in S. 337. ——Ss. 337, 338 — Essence of liability under—Negligence or rashness - Degree of culpability required— Learner practising motor driving in street—Accident through mistake and inexperience — Held not guilty of criminal offence.

Mere negligence or rashness is not enough to bring a case within the ambit of S. 337 or S. 338, I. P. Code. Negligence or rashness proved by evidence must be such as should necessarily carry with it a criminal liability. Whether such liability is present may depend on the degree of culpability having regard in each case to the particular time, place and circumstances. If it is merely a case of compensation or reparation for injury or damage caused to a person or property, it is clearly not punishable under either of the sections. The culpability to be criminal should be such as concern not merely the person injured or property damaged but the safety of the public on the road. But the nature and extent of the injury or damage will be irrelevant in fixing criminal liability for negligence under the sections.

Where there was no traffic or crowd at the place and time of the accident and the accused who was a learner tried to stop the motor but failed to do so as by sheer inexperience he could not be held to be guilty of the criminal offence. 7 Mad H C R 119 and (1807) 3 C and P 635 and 1937 A C 576, Relied on. SECTION 339

——S. 339—Gist of offence — Indirect obstruction.

The fact that an act of an accused indirectly results in the complainant not proceeding in the direction in which he wanted to proceed originally would not make the accused guilty of causing obstruction to the person so as to prevent him from going in that direction. The gist of the offence defined in S. 339 is causing obstruction directly to a human being. A I R 1954 Mad 247, Disting. A I R 1955 N U C (Andhra) 3628.

——S. 339 — Applicability — Unyoking of buffaloes tied to plough does not amount to wrongful restraint of persons. A I R 1955 N U C (Andhra) 3628.

——Ss. 339 and 341 — Accused obstructing private right of way alleged by complainant over land of accused—Accused denying existence of right of way —Trial and conviction under S. 341 — Revision — Accused can plead that evidence adduced did not exclude existence of bona fide belief in mind of accused that he had right to obstruct — Act is not offence in view of exception to S. 339 — Proper remedy of complainant lies in civil Court. . . .

The accused was tried under S. 341, Penal Code for obstructing a private right of way which the complainant claimed over the land of the accused.

The accused denied any such right in the complainant. The trial Court found in favour of the complainant and therefore convicted the accused under S. 341:

Held, that the failure on the part of the accused to plead at the trial that his act fell within the exception to S. 339 could not deprive him of the right to show that the evidence in the case did not exclude the existence of a bona fide belief in his mind that he had a right to close the pathway. The act of the accused did not amount to any offence. Moreover as the dispute could be more appropriately tried in a civil Court instead of in a summary trial on criminal side, the conviction could not be maintained. 51 Cri L J 809 : A I R 1950 Assam 82 (83) (Pr 5).

——Ss. 339, 340, 341—Word 'proceed' in Ss. 339, 340 —Meaning of — Obstruction of bus from proceeding towards its destination—If amounts to wrongful restraint of passanger and crew of bus.

The word 'proceed' in Ss. 339 and 340 is confined to the case of a person who can walk on his own legs or can move by physical means within his own power. Surely the word 'proceeding' in S. 340 includes the case of proceeding by outside agency. To contemplate that when a person driving in a motor vehicle along a highway is stopped and prevented from moving forward would not be said to have been wrongfully restrained if he is asked to get down from the vehicle and left free to move on his foot would take away a very large part of the content and meaning of the word 'proceed' occuring in the definition in S. 339. That word cannot be given the limited meaning of proceed on foot only.

Held, on facts, that the acts of the accused persons in obstructing a motor bus from proceeding towards its destination did amount to wrongful restraint of the passengers as also the crew of the bus within S. 339. 67 Cal W N 1029 : 1964 (2) Cri L J 20 : AIR 1964 Cal 286 (289) (Pt A) (Prs 10, 11).

Where a landlord by locking the door prevents a tenant from entering and making use of a bathroom and a privy which he is entitled to use as a tenant, the landlord is technically guilty of the offence of wrongful restraint under S. 339, Penal Code. However, a dispute of this kind can be tried far more suitably in a civil Court than in a criminal Court:

——S. 339 — Applicability — Obstruction of van in which person is travelling —Offence.

The voluntary obstruction of a van in which persons are travelling would amount to the offence of wrongful restraint of the person in the vehicle. The fact that the person or persons may get down and then be left at liberty to proceed on their way unmolested is immaterial. If the person is prevented from proceeding at the moment of restraint, the terms of S. 339, Indian Penal Code, are satisfied. 1960 Ker L J 856 : 1960 Ker L T 789 : (1961) M L J (Cr) 67 (Ker) : 1961 (1) Cri L J 656 (657) (Pr 11) (Kerala).

——Ss. 339 and 341—Wrongful restraint—Meaning — Public path passing through accused's field — Neighbour passing with ploughs—accused armed with sticks obstructing him and striking bulls, making them run away — Accused held guilty of wrongful restraint.

The offence of wrongful restraint is linear in its scope; while wrongful confinement is circular in its character. Wrongful restraint is keeping a man out of a place where he wishes to be and has a right to be. A person may obstruct another by causing it to appear to the other that it is impossible, difficult or dangerous to proceed as well as by causing it actually to be impossible, difficult or dangerous for that other to proceed. The obstruction must be physical. A verbal prohibition or remonstrance does not amount to such obstruction. The offence is the abridgment of the liberty of a person against his will.

In a wrongful restraint there need not be any stoppage of the movement; it may be directed into a channel different from the direction, in which the victim intends to move. Physical presence of the obstructor is not necessary; nor is any actual assault necessary and fear of immediate harm restraining a man out of a place where he wishes to be and has a right to be is sufficient. Case law Ref.

The accused, who were the owners of a certain land through which a pathway passed, came there armed with sticks and obstructed a neighbour when he was passing with his ploughs and struck the bulls and made them run away. The neighbour came home fearing that if he proceeded further he would also be beaten. The accused's pleas of private way over the land and resistance under a bona fide claim of right were negatived.

Held, that the accused were guilty of wrongful restraint. ('52) 1952 Mad W N 163 : 1952 Mad W N (Cr) 39 : 65 Mad L W 446 : 1952-1 Mad L J 164 : 1954 Cri L J 283 : A I R 1954 Mad 247 (248) (Prs 8, 10).

——Ss. 340, 339, 341 — Word "proceed" in Ss. 339, 340—Meaning of—Obstruction of bus from proceeding towards its destination—It amounts to wrongful restraint of passenger and crew of bus. The word 'proceed' in Ss. 339 and 340 is confined to the case of a person who can walk on his own legs or can move by physical means within his own power. Surely the word 'proceeding' includes the case of proceeding by outside agency. See Penal Code (1860), S. 339. 1964 (2) Cri L J 20 : AIR 1964 Cal 286.

——Ss. 340, 347 & 383 — Wrongful confinement for purpose of extorting money—'Injury' in S. 383 need not be physical.

The accused who were chaukidar and daffadar charged the complainant with theft of an article belonging to a certain person. The complainant denied the charge. Thereupon the accused said that they would take him to the police station. They accordingly tied him with a turban and took him towards the police station. On their way they detained him in an orchard where they made a proposal of payment of Rs. 50 for his release. The complainant then got himself released by making the payment.

Held that (i) the action of the accused in keeping the complainant tied in the orchard was certainly an act which amounted to wrongful restraint in such a manner as to prevent that person from proceeding beyond certain circumscribing limits.

(ii) the word 'injury' in S. 383, Penal Code, was not confined to physical injury. Even a terror of a criminal charge, whether true or false amounts to a fear of injury 7 W R (Cr) 28, (1824) S C & P 479, Rel. on.

(iii) the accused by threatening to take the complainant to the thana on a charge of theft had put him in fear of injury and therefore their act amounted to wrongful confinement for the purpose of extorting the complainant. 1952 Cri L J 1391 : AIR 1952 Pat 379 (380) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

(Penal Code (1860), S. 341.)

1. Wrongful restraint.
2. Sentence.
3. Practice and procedure.

1. Wrongful restraint.

——Ss. 341, 339, 340 — Word "proceed" in Ss. 339, 340—Meaning of—Obstruction of bus from proceeding towards its destination — It amounts to wrongful restraint of passenger and crew of bus. The word "proceed" in Ss. 339 and 340 is confined to the case of a person who can walk on his own legs or can move by physical means within his own power. Surley the word "proceeding" includes the case of proceeding by outside agency. See Penal Code (1860), S. 339. 1964 (2) Cri L J 20 : A I R 1964 Cal 286.

——Ss. 341, 339 — Obstruction—Meaning—It means physical obstruction, may be by force or menaces and threats—Offence under S. 339 or S. 341 is determined more by nature of effect caused and not by nature of act. See Penal Code (1860), S. 339. AIR 1955 N U C (Cal) 1420.

——Ss. 341 and 427 — Wrongful restraint and mischief.

A fisher woman who occupies on payment of rent daily a particular stall in a fish market has a right to be at that stall and cannot be thrown out of it without due process of law. Hence preventing her from exercising her right to go to the stall is an offence under S. 341. And if in order to diminish the utility of the property to her rubbish etc. are dumped such prevention will amount to mischief punishable under S. 427. 1954 Cri L J 551 : A I R 1954 Cal 192 (192) (Pr 3).

——Ss. 341 and 339 — Ranbir Penal Code (12 of 1989 Svt.) — Joint owner of a house having larger share preventing co-owner having smaller share from using a door opening into Sehan — Right of such other owner to use the door not established — Action does not constitute offence of wrongful restraint — Dispute can best the settled by civil Court. See Penal Code (1860), S. 339. 1964 (1) Cri L J 40 : AIR 1964 J and K 4.

——S. 341 — Applicability — Complainant carrying wheat without licence— Bailable offence — Arrest by private persons — Offence—The accused were held guilty of an offence under Ss. 341 and 147, I. P. C. See Madhya Bharat Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act (3 of 1948), S. 15. A I R 1955 N U C (Madh B) 1222 (DB).

——S. 341 — Applicability — Vacant house locked by accused — Offence of wrongful restraint — If committed.

The applicants asserted that the house in dispute belonged to the village community and locked it accordingly. They were convicted under S. 448, Indian Penal Code. While the Additional Sessions Judge in appeal altered the conviction to one under S. 341 of the Penal Code.

Held, that there was a bona fide dispute about title to the house and the intention requisite under S. 441, Indian Penal Code was wanting. In any event, there could be no offence under S. 341, Penal Code. That section contemplates an offence against person and not against property. A person cannot be convicted of wrongful restraint if he locks up a house under a bona fide claim of the same. 1960 M P L J (Notes) 106.

——Ss. 341 and 339, Exception — Obstruction by members of Hindu Community to Harijan in taking a corpse along public road — Constitutes an offence under S. 341—Exception to S. 339 does not not apply —Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (d).

Obstruction by certain members of Hindu Community to Harijan Christians in taking a corpse along a public road is an offence punishable under S. 341, I. P. Code. The fact that the obstruction was only to the corpse being taken along the road and not to the Harijans is no defence. In such a case exception to S. 339, I. P. Code cannot also be resorted to as it applies only to 'private way' and not to public roads. Besides, the Harijan residents have a right under Art. 19 (1) (d) of the Constitution to move freely on the public roads in India and to use every public road. 50 Mad 673; (1938) 2 M L J 160; I L R (1947) Mad 555 and 1949 M W N (Cr) 216, Rel. on; A I R 1958 S C 1032, Dist. (1963) 2 Mad L J 80 : 1963 Mad L J (Cr) 337.

——Ss. 341 and 339 — Scope—Wrongful restraint — User of public way to carry a corpse to burial ground—Obstructions — Offence — Good faith and belief of having a lawful right—If good defence.

Every citizen has a right to use a public road in a lawful manner and will have a right to take a corpse along the public road. It would not be a valid defence to plead that the obstruction caused was only to the carrying of the corpse and not to the persons who carry it. This right of movement is also guaranteed under the Constitution. The Exception to S. 339 of the Penal Code, i.e., the obstruction caused in good faith and believing to have a lawful right to do so is not an offence, applies only to private way. (1963) 2 M L J 80 : 1963 Mad L J (Cr) 337.

——Ss. 341 and 95—Wrongful restraint—It is doubtful whether, without physical obstruction, by mere words, a person commits offence under S. 341—Even if it is considered offence S. 95 applies. 1951 M W N (Cr) 19 (1) : 1951-1 M L J 13 : 1951 Mad W N 71 (1) : 52 Cri L J 716 (1) : A I R 1951 Mad 759 (759) (Pr 1).

——Ss. 341, 339 — Wrongful restraint — Where the complainant was going to his lands with his bulls through a pathway, the accused came there with sticks and obstructed him and his bulls and beat and drove away the bulls and the complainant came away fearing that if he proceeded further he would also be beaten the offence of wrongful restraint is made out. See Penal Code (1860), S. 339. 1954 Cri L J 283 : AIR 1954 Mad 247.

——S. 341 — Wrongful restraint—Prevention to proceed in desired direction amounts to offence — Liberty to proceed in any other or reverse direction is of no avail.

Any person travelling in a vehicle is entitled to travel in that vehicle, and should not be compelled to get down from that vehicle and walk or proceed in any other manner the obstructor wants. That is elementary commonsense. Where, therefore, a driver of a bus makes his bus stand across a road in such a manner as to prevent another bus coming from behind to proceed further, he is guilty of an offence under S. 341, Penal Code, of wrongfully restraining the driver and the passengers of the other bus. It is absurd to say that because the driver and the passengers of the other bus could have got down from that bus and walked away in different directions, or even gone in that bus to a different destination, in the reverse direction, there was, therefore, no wrongful restraint. Such a contention will make "wrongful restraint" under the Penal Code infructuous and meaningless. Proceeding in any direction must only mean proceeding in that direction and not in any other direction, much less in the reverse direction. A I R 1947 Mad 124, Rel. on; A I R 1942 Mad 539, Disting. (1949) 2 Mad L J 703 : 62 Mad L W 864 : 51 Cri L J 568 : 1949 Mad W N 838 : 1950 All W R (Supp) 10 : 1950 All Cri Cas 27 : I L R (1950) Mad 858 : AIR 1950 Mad 233 (233, 234) (Prs 4, 5).

——Ss. 341 and 342 — Obstruction or restraint—Gist of offence.

In every case of assault or hurt, certainly there will be a momentary restriction of the person injured but the gist of the offence either under S. 341 or S. 342 is that there must be a restraint when there is a desire to proceed in a particular direction. 23 Cut L T 88 : 1957 Cri L J 769 : AIR 1957 Orissa 130 (143) (Pt J) (Pr 33) (DB).

——Ss. 341, 342—Wrongful confinement or restraint —Test of — Coercion of mind may be sufficient. See Penal Code (1860), S. 342. 1959 Cri L J 368 : A I R 1959 Punj 134.

——S. 341—Applicability.

Where the passage through the plot on which the complainant's son was proceeding with the complainant's cart full of manure had been used for longtime as a passage for carts to the complainant's fields and the accused prevented the son of the complainant along with the cart to proceed towards complainant's field by erecting a wall across the passage the offence under S. 341 was clearly made out. 1953 Raj L W 199.

——Ss. 341, 376, 453 and 509 (ii) read with S. 28—Six accused charged under—Conviction for lesser offence under S. 354 when offence under S. 376 not proved beyond doubt— One of the accused found guilty under Ss. 341 and 509 (ii) — Others under S. 453—Conviction for offences committed by the co-accused.

A-6 was found to have threatened P. W. 2 (the husband) with a grievous hurt with a 'bichua' and to have wrongfully confined him for a sufficiently long time to enable the other accused 1 and 2 to gain their object of taking away forcibly P. W. 1 (the wife) from the house at 9 p. m. with the common object of committing some mischief on her. The evidence of P. W. 1, was to the effect that A-1 entered the house and took P. W. 1. away by force against her will with the aid of A-2 to a shed some distance away. A-1 disrobed her and A-2 gagging, they ravished her and A-3 to 5 who came there also joined in committing rape. P. W. 3 traced P. W. 1 and A-1 and A-2 to the shed and brought her back run-down and exhausted to the house where A-6 was still holding P. W. 2 in restraint and it was stated that he threatened further danger if P. Ws. 1 and 2 continued to live there.

Hence they left the place the same night to settle elsewhere and no disclosure of the offence was made out of shame.

The medical examination of P. W. 1, some days later could not disclose any injury and any evidence whatever there might have been of the commission of the offence under S. 376 had been obliterated by time. The trial Court acquitted accused 3 to 5 and convicted A-1 and A-2 under Ss. 376, 453, 509 (ii) and 341 and convicted A-6 under Ss. 509 (ii) and 341 as also under S. 453. The accused 1 and 2, preferred an appeal and A-6 another and they were heard together.

Held: The statement of P. W. 1 if it had been made immediately after the occurrence, there could have been first-hand information as to the offence of rape under S. 376 and any signs noted on her person or her clothes may be taken as circumstantial evidence corroborating her evidence on the matter as held in (1945) T L R 109. The convintion of A-1 and A-2 on the uncorroborated testimony of the person alleged to be ravished cannot be maintained when the medical examination long after does not help in any way and especially when her evidence was not relied as against A-3 to A-5 by the trial Court.

But A-1 and A-2 could not escape for what they did to P. W. 1. No explanation is offered by them. All the elements required for proving the offence under S. 354, I. P. Code, were mentioned in the charge against them and so the conviction under S. 376 was changed to one under the lesser offence under S. 354. Their conviction under S. 453 was maintained.

A-1 and A-2 were rightly convicted under Ss. 509 (ii) and 341 on the principle of constructive liability under S. 28 as the offences thereunder had been committed by their co-accused A-6. Similarly A-6 was rightly convicted under S. 453 also for offence committed by A-1 and A-2. 52 Cr L J 874 : I L R (1951) Tra-Co 164 : AIR 1951 T C 167 (DB).

The act of an accused in confining a girl of 9 years in a room, in making her lie on a bed and then sitting on her and becoming naked is clearly one amounting to use of criminal force with the intention or knowledge that the girl's modesty will be outraged and the accused can be convicted under S. 354 and S. 342. 1953 Cri L J 964 : AIR 1953 Madh B 147.

——S. 342 — Offence of wrongful confinement in course of dacoity — Offences are distinct—S. 71 not applicable—Separate sentences must be imposed. See Penal Code (1860), S. 71. 1962 (1) Cri L J 168 : AIR 1962 Manipur 7.

——S. 342—Obstruction or restraint—Gist of offence. Wrongful confinement is a species of wrongful restraint. The gist of the offence either under S. 341 or 342 is that there must be a restraint when there is a desire to proceed in a particular direction. 1957 Cri L J 769 : AIR 1957 Orissa 130.

——S. 342—Applicability—Wrongful confinement—Person confined incapable of departing without immediate seizure by confiner and unable to escape—Offence.

While, no doubt, the absence of any desire on the part of the person confined to move would detract from it being an offence under S. 342, I. P. Code, the mere omission of an attempt to run away when there is a watch, does not mean the absence of a desire to move. Where it cannot be said that an escape is open to the person confined, even if he wished to effect an escape, and the circumstances are such that the person confined could not depart without being seized immediately by the confiner, the offence of wrongful confinement must be held to be committed. ——S. 351—Assault—Aiming lathi blow.

Where a number of persons aim lathi blow at another, it is an act which irrespective of whether the blow hit the mark, renders the wielder guilty of assault as defined under S. 351. 1957 All W R (HC) 149 : 1957 All L J 308.

——Ss. 351 and 353—Police going to arrest offender—Offender running away with a gun in hand without attempt to aim at police — No offence under S. 353 is committed as there is no assault.

Where a police party goes to arrest an offender in connection with a cognizable offence and the offender merely runs away with a gun in hand without attempt on his part to aim it at the police in order to deter them from arresting him, he cannot be said to have committed assault on the police and therefore cannot be convicted under S. 353. 51 Cri L J 657 : AIR 1950 Kutch 23 (23) (Pr 5).

Where the accused for the purpose of inducing the revenue inspector to desist from distraining his properties, threatened to kill the revenue inspector, he is guilty of criminal intimidation under S. 503 and not under S. 352, Penal Code, when there is no evidence to show that the words were accompanied by any gesture, which is essential for constituting assault.

——S. 352—Sentence.

Where the accused was a railway officer of some status, and as such it was his duty to behave fairly and courteously to passengers, his conduct in forcibly trying to occupy the seat occupied by a woman passenger and her babe and assaulting her when she resisted, calls for censure, and where he had added insult to injury in casting aspersions on the character of that passenger the Court must award the maximum sentence permissible under S. 352. ——S. 352 — Sentence — Offences under Ss. 379 and 352 of the Code —Cumulative sentence. As each of the Ss. 379 and 352 creates a substantive offence, the sentence on each should be separate and independent and hence where the accused is convicted under S. 379 read with S. 352 the imposition of cumulative sentence of fine in respect of both is unwarranted. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 35. A I R 1955 N U C (All) 3501.

——Ss. 352, 353, 97, 99 — Constables taking accused to dispensary—Assault on constable—Right of private defence—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 157.

Information was received at the police station that the accused was behaving in a disorderly manner in a public street under the influence of drink. Thereupon some police constables went to the spot and brought the accused to the police station. Then Head constable asked five or six constables to take the accused to the local dispensary for his examination by the medical officer. On the way, the accused refused to go any further, and resisted the attempts of the constables to drag him to the dispensary. While so resisting, he gave a blow to a constable and another to the other constable and made good his escape.

Held, that the police constable had no legal authority to require the accused to submit to medical examination, and the accused had the right of defending himself against the force sought to be illegally exercised against his person in pursuance of that order. The result was that the accused was not guilty either under S. 353 or under S. 352 of the Penal Code. 61 Bom L R 30 : 1959 Cri L J 825 : I L R (1959) Bom 852 : AIR 1959 Bom 284 (286, 287) (Prs 10, 12 to 15) (DB).

——S. 352—'Assaults or uses criminal force.'

Putting hand on the shoulder of the Vaccinator and asking him a question that may legitimately be asked is not such a gesture or preparation to use criminal force which would bring the act of the accused within the meaning of the expression "assaults or uses criminal force" in S. 352. ——S. 352—Prisoners in police lock up—Allegations of ill treatment—Necessity of corroboration.

Though an under-trial prisoner in police custody is necessarily annoyed with the police on account of his detention and is likely to make any wild accusation against the police officers as soon as he is brought before a Magistrate and hence on his uncorroborated testimony, it would not be proper to put the officers on trial, it is well known that there are several methods of causing pain to an under-trial prisoner either for the purpose of extorting a confession or compelling him to give a bribe, or for any other reason, without leaving any visible mark of injury. The Court therefore cannot lay down an invariable rule of prudenee to the effect that no allegation by any under trial prisoner about ill treatment during police custody should be believed unless it is corroborated by independent evidence. SECTION 353

(Penal Code (1860), S. 353).

1. Scope and applicabiiity.
2. Assault on public servant in the execution of his duty.
3. "With intent to prevent or deter public servant from discharging his duty."
4. 'In consequence of'.
5. Assault on public servant acting in good faith and under colour of office.
6. Procedure.
7. Conviction and sentence.

1. Scope and applicability.

——S. 353 — Applicability — Section 14 (3) of Madras General Sales-tax Act does not empower officer with the powers of Police officers to enter domestic premises on mere suspicion — Entry amounting to trespass — Occupants have right to drive him out — Charge under S. 353 not sustainable. (1962) 13 STC 69: (1962) 2 Mad LJ 87: 1962 Mad LJ (Cr) 407: 75 Mad LW 766 (Ker): 1962 (1) Cri LJ 45 (46, 47) (Prs 4, 6).

——S. 353 — Applicability — Accused trying to secure his own release from immediate jeopardy — Public servant pursuing accused not acting in discharge of duty — Assault — Offence — Section 353 not applicable. 1952 Cr LJ 420: AIR 1952 Orissa 83 (85) (Pr 8) (DB).

——S. 353 — Cattle Trespass Act (1871), S. 24 — Ingredients of two offences are not same — Latter does not repeal former — Does not repeal by implication, S. 353, I P. C.

Section 24, Cattle Trespass Act, 1871, does not repeal by implication S. 353, Penal Code. The ingredients of the offences under the two provisions are not the same. A person would be guilty under S. 24 if he rescues cattle after seizure. Assault or use of criminal force is not essential before a person can be convicted under S. 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act. Section 24 was never intended to be a substitute for S. 353, I. P. C. 1965 Pun LR (Supp) 366.

——S. 353 — Ingredients of — Main ingredient is assault or use of criminal force — Mere obstruction to public servant would not amount to offence under S. 353 much less when it cannot be said that public servant was acting in lawful discharge of his official duties. 1963 (1) Cr LJ 559 (560, 562) (Pt A) (Prs 8, 14) (Tripura).

——S. 353 — Conveyance carrying contraband articles — Powers of customs officer, preventive branch, to stop and search conveyance — Direction by customs officer to take conveyance to customs office for checking without detaining goods under S. 5, Land Customs Act or without seizure or arrest under S. 178 or S. 173, Sea Customs Act — Not in lawful discharge of official duties — Disregard of — Offence. See Sea Customs Act (1878), S. 171. 1963 (1) Cr LJ 559 (Tripura).

2. Assault on public servant in the execution of his duty.

——Ss. 353, 95 — Order under Epidemic Diseases Act (1897), S. 2—Preventing entry of pilgrims from outside flocking in Mela area unless they had got inoculated against cholera — Order not making inoculation compulsory for inhabitants of area but authorising competent authority to ask inhabitants to get themselves inoculaed or leave area only in exceptional cases — Health Officer preventing entry of accused, inhabitant of area unless he got himself inoculated — Accused pushing officer and entering area— Prosecution under Section 353, I. ——Ss. 353, 352, 97, 99 — Police Constables taking accused to dispensary — Right of private defence — Held that the police constables were not discharging their duty when they were taking the accused to the dispensary against his will — Hence no offence under S. 353 was committed — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 157). See Penal Code (1860), S. 352. 1959 Cri LJ 825: AIR 1959 Bom 284.

——Ss. 353, 97, 99 — Conviction under S. 353 — Necessary condition — Right of private defence of property — Where a Gram Panchayat issued a distress warrant under the provisions of Bombay Village Panchayats Act and authorised its secretary to recover the dues from the accused but the order was bad as certain steps were not taken it was held that the accused had a right under S. 97 to resist the seizure of goods—(Panchayats — Bombay Village Panchayats Act (6 of 1933), Rules under — Rule 13). See Penal Code (1860), S. 97. 1956 Cri LJ 987: AIR 1956 Bom 580.

——Ss. 353 and 352 — Applicability — Public servant — Travelling — If part of duty — Assault — Offence.

Where a Co-operative Extension Officer while proceeding to his headquarters after attending a meeting of a co-operative society was assaulted by the accused at a bus stop, the offence committed would be one under S. 352 and not under S. 353, I. P. C., S. 353 can apply only, when the public servant is discharging the duty imposed on him by virtue of his office; in other words, he must be performing an act, which is so integrally connected with the duty attached to his office as to form part of it. It is too much to say that he was travelling by virtue of the office which he held. The superior protection afforded to a public servant was not available to him under such circumstances; he must rank with any other citizen of the country, when he is not engaged in the performance of his official duty. 1959 Ker LT 1269: 1959 Ker LJ 1310: ILR (1960) Ker 146: 1960 Cr LJ 828: AIR 1960 Ker 200 (201) (Pr 3).

——Ss. 353, 351 — Police going to arrest offender — Offender running away with a gun in hand without attempt to aim at police — No offence under S. 353 is committed as there is no assault. See Penal Code (1860), S. 351. 51 Cri LJ 657: AIR 1950 Kutch 23.

——S. 353—Identity of public servant assaulted.

In an offence charged under S. 353, the plea that the head constable was not in uniform when he was assaulted and hence the accused did not know that he was a public servant cannot be taken if in fact there was no mistake on the part of the accused as to the identity of the head constable. AIR 1951 Madh Bha 42 (43) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

——S. 353 — Public servant when is not acting in execution of his duty.

An officer exercising his official duties grossly, illegally and in an outrageous manner, cannot be deemed to be a public servant in the execution of his duty so as to bring an assault against such an officer within the purview of S. 353. Thus, a head constable cannot be said to be acting in discharge of his duty if he acts as an arbitrator between two parties when they disagree and behaves in an impolite manner towards one of them. AIR 1951 Madh Bha 42 (43) (Pt C) (Pr 8).

——S. 353 — Applicability — Prosecution for assaulting process-server — Warrant not bearing seal of executing Court nor signed by Judge — Effect — Conviction — Legality.

The accused was prosecuted under S. 353 of the Indian Penal Code for assaulting a process-server who had gone to execute a warrant. The warrant did not bear the seal of the Court which issued it and the signature of the Judge on it could not be deciphered. No evidence was led to prove that the presiding Judge of the executing Court had signed the warrant.

Held, that as the warrant was not prepared in accordance with the provisions of O. 21, R. 24 (2), C. P. Code, it was not a valid warrant and the accused could not be convicted under S. 353 of the Indian Penal Code. (The conviction was changed to one under Section 352, Penal Code, relying on ILR (1946) Nag 395). 1958 MPLJ (Notes) 13.

——Ss. 353 and 99 — Applicability — "Public servant" — Inspector of labour.

An Inspector of Labour is, under the Madras Shops and Establishments Act, within his rights in making the surprise visit to a shop and noting the result of his visit in the book kept for that purpose in the shop. Even though the act done or attempted to be done by him may not be strictly justifiable by law, he would be protected under S. 99.

Hence the fact that there is some irregularity in the inspection of the shop by the Inspector does not absolve the person using force against the officer from being convicted under S. 353. Case-law referred.

[Note.— There are observations made as to how a public servant should behave considerately, tactfully and courteously which is the minimum standard of conduct that is required of public servants in general and subordinate officials engaged in enforcing Acts, like the Madras Shops and Establishments Act in particular]. 66 Mad LW 361: 1953 Mad WN 558: 1953 Cri LJ 1730: AIR 1953 Mad 936 (938, 939) (Pt F) (Prs 8, 11, 12).

——S. 353 — Illegal arrest by public servant — Arrested persons can use force to escape — Constable arresting persons committing affray — Offence being non-cognisable forcible escape is justified — Use of criminal force against constable after escape — Offence under S. 353 is committed.

Under S. 21, Madras District Police Act, police constables are always on duty when interfering in breaches of the public peace like affray within their station limits and jurisdiction. Therefore, a constable, interfering in an affray in order to prevent it, discharges his duty as a public servant though he is not entitled to arrest the persons committing an affray, the offence being non-cognisable. And the persons engaged in affray, if arrested unlawfully, are entitled to inflict the necessary minimum injuries on the constable in order to release themselves from such unlawful custody. However, if the constable is subjected to criminal force by pelting stones, after the persons have escaped from his custody and where there is no need to inflict any criminal force on him for the purposes of such escape, an offence under S. 353, Penal Code, will be made out. (1950) 1 Mad LJ 27: 1956 Mad WN 34: 63 Mad LW 18: 1950 All WR (Supp) 25: 51 Cri LJ 604: 1950 Mad WN (Cri) 14: ILR (1950) Mad 1035: AIR 1950 Mad 365 (366) (Pr 3).

——Ss. 353 and 324 — Applicability — Assault on constable while trying to arrest for cognizable offence — Offence.

Causing hurt with a short sharp-edged instrument is an offence punishable under S. 324, I. P. Code and it is a cognisable offence. A constable even if not on duty is entitled to arrest the offender for having inflicted injuries with a knife and if the constable is assaulted while he attempts to effect the arrest, it is clearly an offence under S. 353, I. P. Code. 23 Cut LT 428: 1958 Cr LJ 541: AIR 1958 Orissa 69 (71) (Pt A) (Pr 12) (DB).

——Ss. 353, 332, 323, 96 and 97 — Obstructing public servant in discharge of his duties — Ingredients of offence — Proof — Accused alleged assaulting Police Officer who wanted to search his (accused's) house for stolen articles, under powers conferred by S. 165 (1), (3) and (5) of Criminal Procedure Code (1898) — Search contravening S. 165, Cr. P. Code being illegal conviction of accused under Ss. 353 and 332, I. P. C. not maintainable — In view of illegality of search and right of accused to private defence of person, conviction of accused could not be even altered to one under S. 323, I. P. Code.

To prove a charge of causing obstruction to a public servant in order to prevent him from discharging his duties, it must be shown by the prosecution that the public servant was discharging his duties lawfully and in accordance with law. When a police officer wants to make a search in exercise of his powers under S. 165, Cr. P. Code he must satisfy by legal and reliable evidence that he had gone there to exercise his power after fulfilment of all the requirements of the section. If the procedure adopted by the officer for the search of the house is not strictly legal as when he fails to comply with the requirements of Section 165, Cr. P. Code in the matter of making a record and sending a copy of it to the Magistrate as required by sub-section (5) the accused cannot be held to be guilty of an offence under Section 353 of the Penal Code. Rev. 1554 of 1953, D/-28-8 1954 (Pat.), Overruled.

The Assistant Superintendent of Commercial Taxes paid a surprise visit to the shop of Hazari Lall and Co., in Barch town in order to inspect the books of accounts maintained by the shop. At that time the appellant was in the shop. The Assit. Suptd. of Commercial Taxes found that two sets of account books were kept in the shop. He took them up and started looking into them. The appellant snatched away both the books from him, passed them on to one of his servants who made them over to another servant who was on the upper floor. The Asst. Supdt. directed his orderly peon to recover the books. The peon was, however, prevented by the appellant from going to the place where the account books had been taken and in the scuffle which ensued between the two, the orderly's shirt was torn.

Held, that the act of the appellant might be said to have caused motion to the Asst. Supdt.'s hands. Further, the natural effect of snatching the books from the hand or hands of the Asstt. Supdt. would be to affect the sense of feeling of the hand or hands of the Asstt. Supdt. There was, therefore, no doubt that the action of the appellant amounted to use of force as contemplated by S. 349, I. P C.

Mere use of force, however, was not enough to bring the act within the terms of S. 353, I. P. C. It had further to be shown that force was used intentionally to any person without that person's consent in order to commit an offence or with the intention or with the knowledge that the use of force would cause injury, fear or annoyance to the person against whom the force was used.

Under delegated powers from the Commissioner the Asssit. Supdt. was authorised under S. 17 (2) of the Bihar Sales Tax Act, 1947, to inspect at all reasonable times all accounts, registers and documents relating to stocks of goods or purchases, sales and deliveries of goods by any dealer and all goods kept in any place of business of any dealer and under S. 17 (4) could enter and search any place of business of any dealer. Though the Asstt. Supdt. had not given any notice of his intention to make any inspection of the shop of the appellant, he could under R. 50 of the Rules under the Act, pay surprise visit of inspection. No permission from the appellant express or tacit, for that purpose was necessary. The Asstt Supdt. was, therefore, lawfully in possession of the account books when he took them up in the shop and started perusing them. The appellant had no justification in law to snatch the books of accounts from him. To feel annoyed at this action of the appellant would be the natural reaction of the Asstt. Supdt. and therefore, the appellant's act must be held to amount to use of criminal force within meaning of S. 350, I. P. Code. Further the appellant's act in snatching away the books amounted to obstruction of an officer making an inspection, which act was made punishable by S. 26 (1) (h) of the Bihar Sales Tax Act.

Merely holding books found lying in the premises for perusing them could not properly be regarded as seizure within meaning of S. 17 of the Bihar Sales Tax Act which required reasons for seizure to be recorded because seizure implied doing something over and above holding an article in one's hand. The Asstt. Supdt. merely picked up the books which were lying in the shop and did not snatch them away from any one, nor did he take them by force. On the contrary they were taken away by force by the appellant. If, indeed, he had retrieved them by force it might have been possible to urge that that latter act of his amounted to seizure. Cr. Rev. No. 82 of 1960 decided on October 6, 1950 (Pat), Distinguished.

The appellant had committed an offence under S. 26 (1) (h) of the Act as also under S. 353, I. P. C. because he had used criminal force. He could be prosecuted for either or both these offences at the discretion of the prosecution. It may be that he was not prosecuted for both the offences and the prosecution was restricted to the offence under S. 353, I. P. C. only to obviate the necessity of obtaining the Commissioner's sanction which was required for prosecution under S. 26 (1) (h) of the Act. Even so, the prosecution could not be said to have done something which was unwarranted by law. An offence under S. 353, I. P. C. was a graver offence than the one under S. 26 (1) (h) of the Act. In choosing to prosecute the appellant for a graver offence under the general law the prosecution could not be regarded as having acted colourably. If the prosecution were to be so restricted graver offences would go unpunished. Crl. Rev. 1554 of 1953 decided on 22-8-1954 (Pat), Overruled. Chandrika Seo v. ——S. 353 — Assault on public servant in execution of his duty — Police officer — Duty of — Police constable receiving information that theft is being committed — Police constable is in duty bound to intervene — Assault during such intervention would be an offence under S. 353.

It is the duty of every Police Officer to prevent the commission of a cognizable offence. Section 149, Cr. P. Code says that he shall, to the best of his ability, interpose and prevent the commission of such an offence. Similarly Section 23 of the Police Act, 1861, requires him to prevent the commission of 'offences'.

Hence, when a constable of police is informed by a person that his crops are being cut away by the accused, the constable is in duty bound to go there to prevent the commission of theft. It is not his duty to examine witnesses and come to a decision whether the informant had established that he is in possession of the land and whether the accused are guilty of theft. In such a circumstance the police constable will be deemed to be discharging his duty though he was not entrusted specifically with the duty of guarding the crops in question, and if he is assaulted by the accused while preventing them from committing the offence the accused will be guilty of an offence under Section 353, I. P. Code, provided the prosecution proves that the accused knew that the person assaulted was a constable. 29 Cut LT 100: 1963 All Cr R 138: 1963 All WR (Sup) 34: 1963 (1) Cr LJ 826 (Orissa).

(Penal Code (1860), S. 354.)

1. Validity.
2. Outraging the modesty of woman.
3. Evidence and proof.
4. Practice and procedure.
5. Sentence.

1. Validity.

——S. 354 — Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Classification under — Should be reasonable and permissible — Held, provisions contained in Section 354, Penal Code cannot be condemned as repugnant to Article 14. See Constitution of India, Art. 14. 1953 Cri LJ 964: AIR 1953 Madh Bha 147.

——S. 354 — Scope — If offends against Art. 14 of the Constitution — (Constitution of India, Art. 14) — "He" meaning of.

The propoun "he" used in the expression "that he will thereby outrage her modesty" must be taken under Section 8, Penal Code, as importing a male or a female. It is thus clear that under Section 354, Penal Code, man as well as a woman can be held guilty of the offence and be punished for it. The section, therefore, operates equally upon all persons whether males or females and as women are not exempt from any punishment under the section, it does not offend against the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution.

That the Penal Code gives no protection to man against "assault or criminal force with intent to outrage his modesty" is really an objection as to the policy of law in not creating a particular offence. It is not an objection as to the infringement of Art. 14 of the Constitution 1953 Cri LJ 964: ILR (1953) MB 361: AIR 1953 Madh B 147 (148) (Pt B) (Prs 2, 3).

——S. 354 — Validity — If violates Art. 15 of the Constitution — (Constitution of India, Article 15 (1)).

The word 'only in Art 15 (1) emphasises the fact that the discrimination that is prohibited under the Article is a discrimination based on the ground of sex, or race, etc., alone. If the discrimination is based not merely on any of the grounds stated in Art. 15 (1) but also on considerations of propriety, public morals, decency, decorum and rectitude, the legislation containing such discrimination would not be hit by the provisions of the Article. ILR (1953) MB 361: 1953 Cri LJ 964: AIR 1953 Madh B 147 (148) (Pt D) (Pr 5).

2. Outraging the modesty of woman.

——Ss. 354, 376 and 511 — Attempt to commit rape — Conviction — Essentials — Intention of accused to gratify passions at all events necessary — Absence of — Accused held guilty under Section 354 for intending to outrage the modesty of the prosecutrix. 1962 All Cr R 39: 1962 All WR (Sup) 10: 64 Punj LR 62: 1962 (2) Cri LJ 715 (716) (Pr 8) (Punj).

——Ss. 354, 342 — Essentials of offence.

It is not act of outraging the modesty that is made an offence under Section 354, Penal Code. In order to constitute an offence under S. 354, Penal Code, there must be an assault or use of criminal force to any woman with the intention or knowledge that the woman's modesty will be outraged. The offence under Section 354, Penal Code can therefore be committed by any man or a woman with the necessary intent or knowledge.

The act of an accused in confining a girl of 9 years in a room, in making her lie on a bed and then sitting on her and becoming naked is clearly one amounting to use of criminal force with the intention or knowledge that the girl's modesty will be outraged and the accused, is rightly convicted under Sections 354 and 342, Penal Code. ILR (1953) MB 361: 1953 Cri LJ 964: AIR 1953 Madh B 147 (148) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

——S. 354 — Applicability — Sense of modesty — A girl of 9 years asked to remove her clothes — Her refusal to do so and shouting for help shows her sense of modesty to be developed — Jack J.'s opinion in AIR 1933 Cal 142, Dissent. ILR (1953) MB 361: 1953 Cri LJ 964: AIR 1953 Madh B 147 (149) (Pt E) (Pr 6).

——Ss. 354 and 376 — Accused taking liberty with consent — Offence — Medical evidence not corroborating prosecutrix — Conviction under S. 376 — If justified.

If the accused took liberty with the girl with her consent, then he cannot be held guilty under Section 354, Penal Code, as it would not amount to an assault or use of criminal force with an intention to outrage her modesty. For, under Section 90, Penal Code, her consent would be a good consent in the absence of anything contrary to show that the consent was obtained in any manner contemplated under that section.

Where the medical evidence does not corroborate the evidence of prosecutrix in the matter of commission of rape, it would not be proper to convict the accused under Section 376, Indian Penal Code. 1949 NLJ 520, Foll. 1961 MPLJ (Notes) 73.

——Ss. 354 and 375 — Applicability — Indecent assault and attempt to commit rape — Distinction — Accused making girl naked and running away on seeing her uncle — Offence.

The distinction between an attempt to commit rape and to commit indecent assault is sometimes very meagre. For the former, there should be some action on the part of the accused which would show that he is just going to have sexual connection with the prosecutrix. For an offence of an attempt to commit rape the prosecution must establish that it has gone beyond the stage of preparation. The difference between mere preparation and actual attempt to commit an offence consists chiefly in the greater degree of determination.

The accused went to the bada of the prosecutrix and tried to seduce her for intercourse. She repelled his advances, which made him furious. He felled her down on the ground forcibly, snatched her lugda and thereby made her naked. Her cries attracted her uncle who came to the spot. On seeing him, the accused fled away.

Held, that the case did not show that the accused was determined to have sexual intercourse at all events because as soon as he saw the uncle of the prosecutrix he ran away. Further he only made the girl naked. He did not expose nor attempted to expose his private part. Therefore, it was not a case of an attempt to commit rape but one under Section 354, Penal Code. 1960 Jab LJ 129: 1960 MPLJ 161: 1960 Cr LJ 612: ILR (1959) Madh Pra 612: AIR 1960 Madh Pra 155 (155, 156) (Prs 5, 6).

——S. 354 — Victim of assault — A girl of 7½ months — Outraging her modesty — Offence under S. 354, if committed.

Held, (Per Mehar Singh and Capoor, JJ., Gurdev Singh, J., Contra)

Held, that the appellant having fingered the private parts of the victim, a girl of 7½ months causing injury to those parts, did not commit an offence under Section 354 of the Penal Code.

So far as the girl of the age of 7½ months is concerned, she is physically incapable of having any sense of modesty or propriety of behaviour, and all that can be said is that if she was sufficiently grown-up to have developed such a sense, the act of the accused would have outraged her modesty. The scope of Section 354 cannot be extended in this sense and it is a misnomer to talk of sense of modesty in connection with an infant girl of the age of 7½ months. AIR 1933 Cal 142, Disst. from.

Per Gurdev Singh, J.:—If assault is committed or criminal force used with the intention or knowledge specified in Section 354, the offender would be guilty, irrespective of the age of the female victim. Once the requisite intention or knowledge relating to the commission of assault or use of criminal force is proved, the offence will be complete.

The language of Section 354 does not indicate that the legislature wanted to limit its applicability only to females above a certain age or those who had attained sufficient maturity of thought or understanding. 1963 (2) Cr LJ 390:

——S. 361 — "Keeping" of lawful guardian.

The word "keeping" cannot be interpreted in a narrow sense. It is not the physical presence in the precincts of the father's house that matters, but whether she was in fact under his guardianship. Whether she left the house as the result of a pre-arranged plan between her and the accused, or, whether she went to answer calls of nature, it cannot make any difference, for in the former case, the accused by being a party to the arrangement takes her from her father's custody, and, in the latter case, her leaving her father's house for answering calls of nature cannot obviously make her any the less under the keeping of her father. A minor Hindu girl below the age of 17 was living under the care and protection of her parents. She was in criminal intimacy with the accused who was running a shop near the girl's house. The girl left her parents' house of her own accord and went to the shop of the accused and entreated him to take her away. The accused then took her to several distant places: ultimately he was arrested by the police.

Held, that the accused had taken the girl out of the keeping of her lawful guardians within the meaning of S. 361, I. P. Code and he was rightly convicted under S. 363, I. P. Code. He knew full well that the girl was living with her parents practically next door and even if he was under no legal obligation to take her back home he was certainly under a legal obligation not to run away with her. One who wants to employ a minor without the permission of his guardian must do so at his peril and it is no defence that a boy who was allowed to work in a particular place can be taken out from his job by another person without the permission of his guardian or his employer. The offence, therefore, of kidnapping is complete. Thus taking of the boy amounts to taking him out of the lawful guardianship as contemplated in S. 361, I. P. C.

The accused enticed away a minor married girl under the age of 18 from the keeping of the lawful guardianship of her husband, without the consent of the guardian. The action in the case was commenced on a complaint made to the police by the husband. This would be an offence under Section 363, Penal Code. The same facts would also constitute an offence under S. 498 of the Penal Code and by virtue of S. 199 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, no Court can take cognizance of it except on a complaint made by the husband of the woman. If the evidence justified a conviction of the offence under S. 363 as charged it would not be open to the trial Magistrate to avoid the conviction of the offence as charged because the offence as made out before him fell under another section of the Penal Code which required a complaint before a Court. Section 26 of the General Clauses Act would justify such conviction. (1964) MLJ (Cr) 594: (1964) 2 MLJ 430: 1964 All WR (Sup) 48: 1964 All Cr R 521 (Mad).

7. Lawful guardian — Explanation.

——Ss. 361, 363 — Lawful guardian.

The lawful guardian would include a de facto guardian.

Where a minor girl an orphan, whose maternal grand-mother lived by begging, was, therefore, living with her cousin since the death of her mother:

——Ss. 361, 363 — Applicability — 'Lawful guardian — Meaning — Mother given custody of minor daughter under decree for divorce — Father forcibly removing girl from custody of mother — Offence.

The words 'lawful guardian' as is apparent from the language of S. 361, are of wider connotation than the word 'legal guardian'. The word 'lawful' in that section has been deliberately used in its wider connotation, and means that whenever the relationship of a guardian and a ward is established by means which are lawful and legitimate, that relationship is intended to be included within the meaning of the words 'lawful guardian' as used in this section. AIR 1954 Bom 339, Rel on.

Where in a suit for divorce by the Hindu wife, the Court after decreeing the same, directs that their minor girl was to remain in the custody of the mother till the father (husband) gets himself appointed as the guardian of the minor under the Guardians and Wards Act, the order is made by virtue of S. 15 of the Bombay Hindu Divorce Act, 1947 and the mother was the lawful guardian of the minor by virtue of that order. If the father who was living separately forcibly takes the minor girl from out of the keeping of the lawful guardian without the consent of such lawful guardian the action of the father amounts to kidnapping. ——S. 361, Expl. — Object of — "Lawful guardian" — Who is.

The provisions of S. 361 and the other cognate sections of the I. P. Code, are intended more for the protection of the minors and persons of unsound mind themselves than for the right of the guardians of such persons. It may be that the mischief intended to be punished partly consists in the violation or the infringement of the guardian's right to keep their wards under the care and custody; but the more important object of these provisions undoubtedly is to afford security and protection to the wards themselves.

"Lawful guardian" includes any person who is lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of the ward concerned. The expression 'lawful guardian' therefore, must be held to include the legal guardian as well as a person who has become the guardian of the minor or the lunatic in a lawful manner.

A person can be said to be lawfully entrusted with care or custody of the minor or the lunatic if it is shown that the care or custody of such ward was given to him by a person who was the legal guardian of the ward or was his lawful guardian. Reading the section as a whole, it is clear that this liberal construction of the words 'lawful guardian' and 'lawfully entrusted' is not inconsistent with their plain and grammatical meaning, and there is no doubt that this liberal construction is consistent with the policy underlying the section and would help to prevent or punish the mischief at which it aims. 8 Cal 971 (FB) and AIR 1941 Nag 66, Rel. on; AIR 1923 Cal 672 and AIR 1930 Cal 665 (2), Dissented from. 56 Bom LR 258: ILR (1954) Bom 784: 1954 Cr LJ 1032: AIR 1954 Bom 339 (340, 341) (Prs 6, 8) (DB).

——S. 361, Explanation — Lawful guardian — Hindu minor girl — Right of maternal uncle — Entrustment may be proved by surrounding circumstances and conduct of parties.

The only persons having an absolute right to the custody of a Hindu minor are the father and the mother of the minor. No such right exists in the uncle on the mother's side of the minor. Such a relationship would not in law be a defence to a charge of kidnapping a minor from the custody of a de facto guardian.

Entrustment which S. 361 requires may be inferred from a well-defined and consistent course of conduct governing the relations of the lawful guardian alleged in the indictment and of the minor. AIR 1919 Pat 27 (FB), Foll. 1962 BLJR 41: 1962 (1) Cri LJ 440. AIR 1962 Pat 121 (122) (Prs 5, 6).

——Ss. 361 and 363 — Applicability — Muslim minor married girl — Abode at the husband's house after marriage — Removal by accused from custody of husband — Offence.

The mother of the Muslim minor married girl continues to be the guardian of the girl even after the marriage. But on her being allowed to live in the husband's house the husband gets the guardianship of the girl and the natural guardianship is in abeyance. The husband while taking her to his house from short visit to her mother's house or an uncle's house he is the rightful and lawful custodian of the minor wife within the meaning of S. 361, Penal Code.

If the accused removed the girl from such custody and it was not proved that the removal was at the instance of the mother, who could terminate the guardianship of the husband no offence could be said to be committed. But where the mother did not do so and she only ratified the same after the complaint, having been won over as found by the Courts below, the accused cannot escape punishment for the offence; for in such a case the offence is not taken out of the purview of S. 363, Penal Code. 1953 Cri LJ 73: AIR 1952 Trl 27 (28) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

8. Evidence.

——S. 361 — Proof of age — In a prosecution under S. 363 age of the girl is a material point because unless it is shown that she was below 18 years of age at the relevant time there could be no case of kidnapping within the meaning of Section 363, I. P. C. The doctor's estimate about age does not amount to proof, but is merely an opinion. See Penal Code (1860), S. 363. 1957 Cri LJ 847: AIR 1957 Him Pra 42.

——S. 361 — Proof of age — Conflict between expert witness and other witnesses — Radiologist's opinion is not to be preferred to the positive evidence furnished by the Municipal birth register, the school admission register and the evidence of the girl's father particularly when medico-legal opinion is that owing to the variations in climatic conditons and other factors affecting the people of the different States of India, it cannot reasonably be expected to formulate a uniform standard for the determinaton of age by the extent of ossification and the union of epiphysis in bones. ——S. 361 — Age of person kidnapped can be proved by other evidence than horoscope.

Where there is evidence in the case, consisting of the extract from the school register, the testimony of parents and relatives and of medical opinion, to show that the kidnapped girl was below eighteen years on the date of the offence, it cannot be held that she has not been proved to be a minor on that date merely because her horoscope was not put in evidence: AIR 1958 Kerala 19; AIR 1958 Orissa 224; AIR 1957 Him Pra 42 and AIR 1957 Punj 78, Rel. on. 1960 Mad WN 674.

——S. 361 — Age of minor — Medical evidence — Certificate given on examination of height, weight, breast, teeth etc. — Evidence is worthless — Evidence Act (1872), S. 45.

When a Doctor gives evidence in Court, particularly, with regard to the age, which is most material it is the duty of the prosecution to elicit from the Doctor, the reasons which made her come to the conclusion stated in her certificate.

Section 361, in its application to Manipur Territory, makes it necessary that in a case of alleged kidnapping of minor girl in that territory, the fact to be proved conclusively by the prosecution is that the girl was below the age of 15 years. To prove that the girl was minor, the Doctor has not to give valid reasons why she concluded that the girl was below 15 years. The conclusive test in such matters of age is the ossification of bones and for this X-ray examination of the bones is absolutely necessary, when alone the Court will attach weight to the opinion of the expert under S. 45 of the Evidence Act. AIR 1916 PC 242 and AIR 1939 All 708, Rel. on. 1962 (1) Cr LJ 49: AIR 1962 Manipur 5 (6) (Prs 6, 8, 9).

——S. 361 — Proof of — Age of girl — Matters to be taken into account.

In fixing the age of a girl the growth of teeth, growth of pubic and axillary hair, growth of the breasts, the height and weight of the girl are relevant considerations. The ossification test is no doubt a surer test for determining age. But Courts have acted on the opinion of the doctors arrived at without conducting any ossification tests and based on other factors as indicated above. AIR 1954 Orissa 33, Rel. on. 24 Cut LT 261: 1958 Cri LJ 1211: AIR 1958 Orissa 224 (225) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

——Ss. 361 and 363 — Proof of age — Ossification test — Value of — Conviction based on mere opinion of expert — Sustainability — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 45).

An X-ray ossification test may provide a surer basis for determining the age of an individual than the opinion of a medical expert, but it can by no means be so infallible and accurate. The opinion of a medical expert based on such test cannot be regarded to be conclusive. Too much reliance should not be placed on the Table given at P. 30 of Modi's Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology showing the age in years of the appearance and fusion of some of epiphysis as it merely indicates an average and is likely to vary in individual cases.

When there is no direct evidence to prove that the kidnapped girl was below 18 years, a conviction of the accused based on the mere opinion of a medical expert that the girl had not crossed her 18th year cannot be sustained. 1957 Cr LJ 475: AIR 1957 Punj 78 (78, 79) (Prs 3 to 5).

A woman, who is grown-up and a major, is free to refuse to go with a person who claims to be her husband. And if such person attempts to take her away by force from her father's house with a view to abduct her then she is justified under S. 100 in using force in resisting his assault even if such force were to result in his death. 1951 Nag LJ 252: ILR (1959) Nag 508: AIR 1951 Nag 349 (349) (Pr 5).

——S. 362 — Abduction and kidnapping — Distinction. See Penal Code (1860), S. 366. 1953 Cri LJ 1790: AIR 1953 Punj 258.

——Ss. 362, 366 — Absence of force or deceit — No offence.

Abduction as defined by S. 362, I. P. Code requires two essentials:— (1) forcible compulsion or inducement by deceitful means; and (2) the object of such compulsion or inducement must be the going of a person from any place. Where the evidence shows that the accused did not compel the girl to go from her place to other places but she accompanied the accused of her own free will and that there was no inducement by deceitful means to go out of her village, the accused cannot be convicted of offence of abduction under S. 366, I. P. Code. 55 Punj LR 339: 1953 Cri LJ 1790: AIR 1953 Punj 258 (259) (Pt A) (Prs 11, 17).

——S. 362 — Abduction — What prosecution has to prove.

An offence of abduction can be said to have been committed only if the prosecution is able to prove against the alleged offender that he has by force compelled or by deceitful means induced another person to go from any place. Where the finding is that the girl had eloped with the accused who was a young man and that she was neither compelled nor induced by him by any deceiful means to run away from the place of her mother the accused cannot be held guilty of abduction. 1959 Raj LW 269.

——Ss. 362 and 361 — Girl under 16 years of age willingly going out with accused for sexual intercourse — No force or inducement — There is no abduction —Since there was no intention of taking away the girl from guardiantship of father. there is no kidnapping. 1952 Cri LJ 1136: 1952 Raj LW 95: ILR (1951) 1 Raj 871: AIR 1952 Raj 123 (126) (Pt C) (Pr 16) (DB).

——S. 362 — Deceit — Meaning — Words and Phrases.

The expression "deceitful means" in S. 362 is wide enough to include the inducing of a girl to leave her guardian's house on a pretext. It is. really speaking. a matter of intention and even if the promisé held out by the accused is fulfilled by him the question is whether he is acting in a bona fide manner when he is extending certain promises to a woman and thereby inducing her to accompany him. ('51) 52 Cr LJ 217: 1950 Raj LW 340: AIR 1951 Raj 33 (35) (Pt C) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 362 — Unlike kidnapping, abduction is continuing offence. ('51) 52 Cr LJ 217: 1950 Raj LW 340: AIR 1951 Raj 33 (36) (Pt D) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Ss. 362 and 366 — Essentials — Woman leaving husband's place willingly but subsequently discovering intention on part of accused of selling her for concubinage — Deceit is proved. AIR 1955 NUC (Sau) 1457 (DB).

——Ss. 362 and 366 — Consent — Necessity of — Force — Use of — Intention of accused — (Cochin Penal Code (I of 1059), Ss. 342 and 346).

In the case of an offence under Section 362, no question arises as to whether there was consent or absence of consent. It is not necessary, according to the definition of abduction that any force should be used. It is enough if by deceitful means a woman is induced to go from any place. If the intention of the accused is that she may be seduced to illicit intercourse by which is meant intercourse between a man and woman who are not husband and wife. that would make the accused liable for this offence under S. 366. Where it is clear from the evidence that the person who is charged had abducted the woman in order that she may be seduced to illicit intercourse, he can be brought under S. 366 and punished. 1952 Cri LJ 1387: AIR 1952 Trav-Co 379 (381) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Ss. 363, 361 — "Lawful guardian" — Meaning — Mother given custody of minor daughter under decree for divorce — Mother is lawful guardian — Father forcibly removing girl from custody of mother without her consent — Father is guilty of kidnapping — (Words and Phrases). See Penal Code (1860), S. 361. 1958 Cri LJ 1296: AIR 1958 Bom 381.

——S. 363 — Kidnapping — Minor girl leaving home without persuasion or inducement by accused — Accused not restoring minor to her home — Accused not guilty under S. 363 — Essentials of S. 363 to be proved by prosecution.

If a girl leaves her home without any persuasion or inducement held out by the accused so that she has got fairly away from home and then goes to him. his not restoring her to her home is no infringement of the law. To sustain a conviction the prosecution has to prove that the accused had some active part in the minor leaving her guardian's house. The offence under S. 363 is not a continuing one. and it really consists in the initial act of takng her from the keeping of her lawful guardian. AIR 1958 Kerala 121. ——S. 363 — Taking — Proof — To sustain a conviction under S. 363, I. P. C. There must be proof of taking. A man is not bound to return to her father's custody a girl who, without any inducement on his part, has left her home and come to him: it must be shown that prisoner took some active step by persuasion or otherwise, to cause the girl to leave her home. See Penal Code (1860), S. 361. 1958 Cri LJ 637: AIR 1958 Ker 121.

——Ss. 363, 361 — "Kidnapping from lawful guardianship" — What constitutes.

Held, that the circumstances unmistakably pointed to one inference that Kumari Ivy could not have left her father's house unless there was a definite plan arrived at between her and the accused, which might have been even during the short halt of the accused at her place. The intimacy that had developed between the two did play a considerable part in the whole affair of elopment and Kumari Ivy could not have left the house but for the instigation or co-operation or accompaniment of the accused. The accused was therefore guilty of the offence under Section 363. 1961 (1) Cr LJ 513: 1960 MPC 718: 1960 Jab LJ 1071: 1960 MPLJ 1300. ——S. 363 — Offence under — Taking from lawful guardianship — Father of girl keeping her at his relative's house — Girl on verge of majority, studying in college, telephoning accused and meeting him and going with him to Sub-Registrar's Office for registering marriage agreement — No threat or inducement on part of the accused — Girl's insistence of marrying him — Accused held guilty of having taken girl out of guardianship of her father without his consent ('63) 1963 Mad WN 636.

——S. 363 — Consent or disposition of minor does not exonerate accused.

In considering the liability of the accused for an offence under Section 363 the only point which has to be decided is whether he took or induced the minor to come away from her lawful guardian for the time being. Any disposition of the girl such as her being over-sexed or animated by a desire to have a good time or any consent or forwardness on her part are immaterial to the question of the prisoner's liability under the section.

Where the accused took the minor girl from her house under the pretence of taking her to the Cinema and there was nothing in the conduct of the girl, upto the moment of her departure later on in the company of the accused, to suggest that she had renounced the protection of her guardian but on the other hand there was evidence to show that she would not have left the guardian but for the promise of the accused to marry her:

Held, that there was sufficient 'taking' by the accused to render him liable for the offence under S. 363. 1960 Mad WN 674.

——Ss. 363, 366 — Applicability — Section 366 is aggravated form of offence under Section 363 — Marriage should be against girl's will for offence under S. 366. AIR 1955 NUC (Mad) 1219.

——S. 363 — Ingredients of offence.

An offence under Section 363 of the Penal Code is made out if (i) the person kidnapped was a minor; (ii) the minor was in the keeping of a lawful guardian; (iii) the accused took or induced such person to leave out of such lawful keeping and such taking was done without the consent of the lawful guardian. Where the evidence established that the victim was a girl under 18 years of age in the keeping a lawful guardian, her father, and that there was a preconcerted arrangement between the accused and her to leave the house, elope and have a good time the accused thereby instigating the victim to leave her guardian with all her belongings:

Held, the offence of kidnapping a minor girl from lawful guardianship was made out. (1952) 1 MLJ 536: 1952 Mad WN 231: 1952 Mad WN (Crl) 55: 54 Cr LJ 1013: AIR 1954 Mad 62 (63. 64) (Pt B) (Prs 10, 12).

——Ss. 363 and 361 — Married girl — Minor Muslim girl living in husband's house after marriage — After marriage husband becomes the guardian after she begins to live with him — Removal from custody of husband while returning from short visit to mother — Removal not shown to have been at the instance of mother — Offence under Section 363, I. P. C. is complete and subsequent ratification by mother cannot take the case out of the purview of Section 363, I. P. C. — Effect. See Penal Code (1860), S. 361 1953 Cri LJ 73: AIR 1952 Tripura 27.

2. Kidnapping — Proof of.

——S. 363 — Minor girl not likely to have left guardianship of father but for promise by accused to marry her — There is sufficient 'taking' for purpose of S. 363.

Where, but for something which the accused consented to do and did ultimately, a minor girl would not have left her father's house, there is sufficient "taking" in law for the purpose of Section 363. Where, therefore, the evidence shows that the minor would not have left the guardianship of her father and gone with the accused but for the promise of the accused that he would marry her, the accused is guilty of having taken her out of the guardianship of her father without his consent. 54 MLJ 456. Rel. on; 1865-2 MHLR 331; 1968-4 MHCR 20, Ref. 1964 All Cri R 114: 1964 All WR (Sup) 5.

——Ss. 363, 366, 360, 361, 498 — Prosecution under Ss. 363 and 366 — Proof.

To constitute an offence under Sections 363 and 366 it is not incumbent upon the prosecution to prove that the person kidnapped or abducted was married. The question of marriage would have been material in case the accused had been prosecuted under Section 497 or S. 498, I. P. C 1957 Cr LJ 847: AIR 1957 Him Pra 42 (44) (Pt A) (Pr 11).

——Ss. 363, 366 — Kidnapping — Proof of "taking" is essential — Consent of minor is immaterial — Intention to marry against will of minor is essential for offence under S. 366.

To sustain the conviction under S. 363, I. P. C., there must be proof of "taking". The consent of the minor is no excuse, for, even then, it would amount to "taking". The prosecution has to prove that the accused had some active part in the girl leaving her father's house and taking shelter in his house.

A minor girl left her parents' house of her own free will and went to reside with the accused They got married subsequently. There was no evidence to show that the accused intended to marry her against her will but on the contrary the girl was quite willing to marry the accused and in fact pressed the accused to marry her.

Held, that the offence under the first part of Section 366, I. P. C. had not been made out against the accused. 1960 Ker LJ 205: 1960 Ker LT 273: 1960-1 Ker LR 301: ILR (1960) Ker 481.

——S. 363 — Appreciation of evidence — Delay in lodging complaint of offence under S. 363, Penal Code —Acceptable explanation for delay forthcoming in the case — Delay will not discredit the evidence of the kidnapped girl which is otherwise convincing and entitled to full credit. 1960 Mad WN 674.

——S. 363 — Age of the girl.

Even if there is evidence that the accused had induced the girl to accompany him, the offence punishable under Section 363 is not brought home to him. The prosecution must further prove that on the date of the incident, the girl was under eighteen years of age. 1956 Cr LJ 263: 1956 All WR (Sup) 1: ILR (1956) Nag 282: 1955 Nag LJ 799: AIR 1956 Nag 74 (76) (Pt B) (Pr 20) (DB).

——S. 363 — In order to prove an offence under Section 363 the prosecution must show that the accused took some active part in the girl leaving her lawful guardian's custody and taking shelter with him — Held, on facts that the accused took part in taking the girl out of her lawful guardian's custody and the age of the girl was below 18 years and the offence of kidnapping was complete — The offence of kidnapping being against the guardianship and the girl below 18 years her consent was quite immaterial. See Penal Code (1860), S. 361. (1963) 29 Cut LT 602.

——S. 363 — Out of the keeping of the lawful guardian — Interpretation of — Minor girl of B under the guardianship of A — A out of town — B's son in the absence of A taking her forcibly to B's house where C proposed her marriage — Refusal by the girl — C taking her away forcibly from B's house — Contention that when C took her away she was not under the guardianship of A or anybody else — Held, till she was taken away by C the guardianship of A continued — The offence under Section 363 was sufficiently established. See Penal Code (1860), S. 361. AIR 1955 NUC (Orissa) 2471 (DB).

3. Age of person kidnapped — Proof of.

——Ss. 363, 361 — Proof of age.

In a prosecution under Section 363, age of the girl is a material point because unless it is shown that she was below 18 years of age at the relevant time, there could be no case of kidnapping within the meaning of Section 363, I. P. C. The doctor's estimate about age does not amount to proof, but is merely an opinion. AIR 1931 Lah 401 and AIR 1939 All 708, Rel. on. 1957 Cr LJ 847: AIR 1957 Him Pra 42 (44) (Pt B) (Pra 12, 13).

——S. 363 — Accused charged with kidnapping — Age of prosecutrix is primary question — Age estimated at 16 by lady doctor on physical development and ossification test — Skiagram not produced in Court — Radiologist allowing margin of only one month in his estimate of age of prosecutrix — Assertion ridiculous — Evidence could not be said to prove prosecutrix below 18 years of age — Conviction cannot be sustained. 1965 MPLJ (Notes) 3.

——S. 363 — Age of prosecutrix disputed — Kotwari book reciting name of prosecutrix as well — Entry of name not in official duty — Entry to be proved by independent evidence — No medical evidence or other evidence on record — Age held to be not proved. 1962 MPLJ (Notes) 137.

——Ss. 363 and 366 — Proof of age — Doctor's opinion and ossification test — If conclusive — Adverse inference for failure to produce Birth Register.

Accused was convicted on Jury verdict under Section 363 for taking away a girl below 18 years. Jury verdict was based on doctor's evidence which was based on appearance and development of the girl's body stating her to be about 16 years old. Ossification test located her age to be about 17 years.

Held, that the burden of proving that the age was below 18 years had not been discharged by prosecution beyond reasonable doubt. The charge on the point of age was vitiated on account of failure of Judge to warn Jury that the doctor's evidence was insufficient to prove the age. The Judge should have also told that the Jury was free to draw adverse inference against the prosecution for its failure to produce the birth register in the Court. 1958 MPLJ (Notes) 38.

——Ss. 363 and 361 — Age of minor girl — Ossification test — Value of — Conviction based on mere opinion of expert that kidnapped girl had not completed her 18 years — No direct evidence to prove that the kidnapped girl was below 18 years — Conviction cannot be sustained — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 45). See Penal Code (1860), S. 361. 1957 Cri LJ 475: AIR 1957 Punj 78.

5. Corroboration of statement of kidnapped person — If necessary.

——S. 363 — Evidence.

In law no corroboration to the story deposed to by the girl is required to base a charge against the accused of an offence punishable under Section 363, Penal Code. But where her story is of an unnatural character and contains contradictions it is not safe to place reliance on the testimony unless it is corroborated by independent evidence. 1956 Cr LJ 263: 1956 All WR (Supp) 1: ILR (1956) Nag 282: 1955 Nag LJ 799: AIR 1956 Nag 74 (75) (Pt A) (Pr 14).

●——364, 302 — Charges under — Trial with aid of jury — Acquittal under Section 364 but conviction under Section 302 — Appeal to Supreme Court under Art. 134 (1) (c) — Supreme Court not concerned with acquittal under S. 364 — No misdirection to jury — There was held no scope for argument that verdict should be interfered with or conviction under S. 302 based on it altered on hypothetical considerations not founded on any facts on record. (1963) SCD 638: (1963) 1 SCWR 511: (1964) 1 SCJ 82: 1964 Mad LJ (Cri) 19: (1963) 1 Mys LJ (SC) 96: (1963) Supp 2 SCR 852: 1963 (2) Cr LJ 170: AIR 1963 SC 1074 (1077) (Pt C) (Pr 12).

●——S. 364 — Proof — Accused charged under Sections 302, 364 and 386, I. P. C. — Confession not relied in respect of offence under Section 302 — It can be taken into consideration against the accused to lend assurance to conclusion against them in so far as other offences are concerned based on circumstantial evidence. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 24. 1957 Cr LJ 559: AIR 1957 SC 381.

●——Ss. 364, 386 — Applicability — Recovery of ransom under threat of murder of son — Offence.

Where the modus operandi as disclosed in the letters from the accused demanding ransom from the father of the boy whom they have kidnapped is by putting him in fright of the boy being murdered and there is throughout the likelihood of the boy being murdered in case the ransom money was not paid for one reason or other, the accused are guilty of the aggravated forms of kidnapping and extortion under Ss. 364 and 386, I. P. C. 1957 Cr LJ 559. AIR 1957 SC 381 (387) (Pt E) (Pr 7).

●——Ss. 364, 386, 34, 109, 120-B — Accused acting with common intention and conspiracy — Conviction and sentence — Concurrent finding — Interference — (Constitution of India, Article 136).

The concurrent finding, that a particular accused is guilty of criminal conspiracy along with the other for the commission of the offences is not open to challenge in the appeal before the Supreme Court under Article 136. Where on the same circumstantial evidence it is found that the offences under Sections 364 and 386, I. P. C. were actually committed in pursuance of the conspiracy or in pursuance of the common intention, one would be equally guilty with the other of the two substantive offences and would be liable to the same sentence. Such daring offences would necessarily have called for active planning and co-operation of both the accused together and probably of others. It is not, therefore possible to make any distinction between them even as regards the sentence. 1957 Cr LJ 559: AIR 1957 SC 381 (388, 389) (Pt G) (Prs 10, 11).

——S. 364 — Essentials of offence — Non-direction to Jury amounting to misdirection — Effect.

In order to bring home a charge under Section 364, Penal Code in a trial by Jury the Jury must be satisfied that at the time when the accused took away the deceased they had the intention to cause death. The omission on the part of the Judge to point out to the Jury the possibility that there was no such plan at the time when the deceased was called by the accused to partake of a feast but that there was a drunken brawl subsequently must be regarded as a non-direction, amounting to misdirection. 1956 Cr LJ 1313: AIR 1956 Cal 600 (602) (Pr 9) (DB).

——S. 364 — Applicability — Accused charged under Ss. 302 and 364 but acquitted under S. 302 can be convicted under S. 364.

Where an accused is charged under Ss. 302 and 364, Penal Code and has been acquitted on a charge of murder, he can be convicted under Section 364. For this purpose the motive, the previous relations of the parties and the circumstances showing clearly that the deceased was abducted with the object of being murdered or of being so disposed of as would put him in danger of being murdered should be taken into consideration. AIR 1933 Lah 1035 (2), Rel. on. AIR 1953 Hyd 249, Expl. 1954 Cri LJ 641: ILR (1953) Hyd 750: AIR 1954 Hyd 88 (89) (Prs 5, 7) (DB).

——S. 364 — Applicability.

Where the case of the prosecution is that the person abducted has been murdered by the abductor, there is no scope for the charge under Section 364. AIR 1947 Cal 35; AIR 1945 Cal 42; AIR 1940 Cal 561, Foll. ILR (1953) Hyd 322: 1953 Cri LJ 1517: AIR 1953 Hyd 249 (249) (Prs 3, 4) (DB).

——Ss. 364 and 302 — Abductor charged with murder of abducted person — Further charge under S. 364 — Maintainability.

When the case of the prosecution is that the person abducted has been murdered by the abductor there is no scope for further charge under Section 364, I. P. C. for kidnapping or abducting in order to murder. 1960 Ker LJ 220.

——Ss. 364 and 302 — Charge under S. 364 — Maintainability — Intention of abductor to murder the person abducted must be proved — Specific case that abductors had murdered the person abducted — Charge under S. 364 cannot be maintained.

Mere abduction is not an offence. In order to sustain a charge under Section 364, I. P. Code, it is incumbent upon the prosecution to prove that the abductors had the intention at the time of abduction that person abducted should be murdered or would be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered. Where the case for the prosecution is that the person abducted has been murdered by the abductor there can be no scope for a charge under Section 364. (1961) ILR 40 Pat 809.

——S. 364 — Applicability.

Where the accused was one of the persons who were responsible for kidnapping or abducting the deceased, so that he may be murdered or may be so disposed of as to be put in danger of being murdered and the deceased was found lying murdered on the next day, the conviction of the accused was altered from one under Section 302, Penal Code, to Section 364, Penal Code, and he was sentenced to imprisonment for life. (1962) 64 Pun LR 1017.

——S. 364 — Murder — Proof of death— Abduction with intent to murder — Proof of intention — Circumstantial evidence — Charge under Sections 302/34 and 364 — Failure to prove that accused was murderer — Accused can be held guilty under Section 364. See Penal Code (1860), S. 302. 1958 Raj LW 584: ILR (1958) 8 Raj 181.

——S. 365 — Abduction — Accused known to witnesses before — Failure of witnesses to indentify accused as abductor — Eye-witness failed to identify accused at the identification parade — Evidence of eye-witness not relied on — Abducted person also failed to identify accused — Accused given benefit of doubt and acquitted. 1965 All WR (HC) 570: 1965 All Cri R 375.

——Ss. 365, 342 — Cri P. C., S. 423 — Alter the finding — Accused charged under S. 365, I. P. C., acquitted of that offence but convicted under Section 342, I. P. C — Appellate court has power to alter the finding and convict him under Section 365, I. P. C. without altering the sentence imposed by the trial Court. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 423. AIR 1954 All 51.

——S. 365 — Scope.

An offence under the section is clearly made out when there is a finding that the woman in question had been forcibly dragged out of her house and was kept locked up in a room in the house belonging to the accused. It is not correct to say, on the ground that as the house was in the abadi the fact of her having been locked in that house cannot be a secret and that therefore was no offence under the section. 1953 All WR (HC) 360: 1953 All LJ 421: 1954 Cri LJ 46: AIR 1954 All 51 (52) (Pt A) (Pr 8).

——S. 365 — Charge — Joinder — Major and minor offences — An offence under Section 365 is a minor offence within the meaning of Section 238, Cr. P. C. as compared with offences under Section 366 and S. 376 and High Court can convict an accused of the former offence without a formal charge having been framed. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 238. AIR 1954 Madh B 97.

——Ss. 365 and 363 — Scope.

Essence of offence under Section 365 also is kidnapping. Therefore where the accused cannot be convicted under Section 363 he cannot be convicted under Section 365 also. 1957 Raj LW 345: 1957 Cr LJ 688 (694) (Pt E) (Pr 20).

——Ss. 365 and 366 — Applicability — No circumstances to warrant inference that accused had one of objects mentioned in Section 366; in view — Inference that accused abducted woman for purpose of confining her wrongfully and secretly can be drawn — Offence held fell under S. 365 and not S. 366. AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 467 (DB).

——Ss. 365 and 366 — Applicability.

Accused abducting woman by force — No evidence about intention to compel her to marry against her will or to force or seduce her to illicit intercourse — Woman not returning home — Case falls under Section 365 and not under Section 366. AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 467 (DB).

——Ss. 365, 366 — Criminal P. C., S. 238 — "Minor offence" — S. 365, I. P. C., is minor offence as compared to one under Section 366, I. P. C. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 238. AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 467.

19. Sentence.

1. Scope and applicability.

——S. 366 — Guardianship — Minor Hindu widow — Her father-in-law is her legal guardian and not her mother — Father-in-law can legally marry her in Karao form to another — Father-in-law commits no offence under Penal Code, S. 366. See Hindu Law — Guardianship. AIR 1960 All 479.

——S. 366 — Knowledge — Accused taking part in marriage of abducted minor girl — Accused not related to girl, giving out she was sister of girl's mother and had right to give her in marriage — Accused held guilty under Section 366. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 175.

——S. 366 — Knowledge — A abducting minor girl and taking her to another place for purposes of giving her in marriage — B, A's friend accompanying party on invitation of A not knowing that girl was abducted — B held not guilty under S. 366. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 175.

——S. 366 — Essentials — Ingredients of offence — Absence of intention or knowledge specified in section — No offence. AIR 1955 NUC (Assam) 4211 (DB).

——Ss. 366 and 361 — Minor girl taken away by accused for illicit intercourse from unlawful custody of original kidnapper— Does not amount to kidnapping and hence no offence under Section 366. See Penal Code (1860), S. 361. 1961 (2) Cri LJ 578: AIR 1961 Bom 282 (DB).

——S. 366 — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 549 — Criminal Courts and Court Martial (Adjustment of Jurisdiction) Rules (1952), Rr. 3, 4 — Navy (Discipline) Act (1934), Ss. 43, 45, 46 — Accused a naval rating on shore leave, charged under Section 366, Indian Penal Code — Magistrate committing the accused to Sessions — Committal Order, proper— Intimation to competent military authority necessary only in cases of offences expressly falling within terms of Sections 2 to 42 of Navy (Discipline) Act 1934 — Offence under Section 366, I. P. C. not one of offences mentioned in First Para of Section 45 of Navy (Discipline) Act 1934 — Jurisdiction of ordinary criminal Courts not taken away. (1956) 58 Bom LR 157.

——S. 366 — Essential ingredient of offence is intention. AIR 1955 NUC (Bom) 6074 (DB).

——S. 366 — Applicability — Taking away of a girl — Minority of person taken away is immaterial in so far as her leaving the house of her own accord is concerned. Because a minor may not be competent to give her consent to her taking but a minor is certainly competent to leave the protection of her guardian of his or her own accord. See Penal Code (1860), S. 361. 1957 Cr LJ 1114: AIR 1957 Cal 589.

——S. 366 — Taking of minor girl — Absence of evidence — Effect.

Although there may be evidence in the case under Section 366, I. P. C., regarding the minority of the girl, if there is complete absence of evidence regarding another essential ingredient of the offence, namely, the taking of the girl by the accused, or of the active participation of the accused in the girl's leaving her guardian's house, there is no offence under S. 366. 1957 Cr LJ 1114: AIR 1957 Cal 589 (591) (Pt C) (Pr 7) (DB).

——S. 366 — Husband forcibly carrying his wife from her parent's house — He cannot be convicted under Section 366.

Where there is no evidence to prove the dissolution of marriage of the wife with her husband and she continues to be his wife, in spite of her Natra marriage with another, the husband cannot be convicted under S. 366 for forcibly taking her with him from her parent's house. The fact that the wife was given away in Natra marriage to another does not itself lead to the conclusion that her marriage with the husband had been validly and legally dissolved. It is obvious from the language of Sections 362 and 366, Penal Code, that if a husband by force compels his wife to come to him and to live with him as his wife, he does not commit any offence under Sections 366. 1959 Jab LJ 570: 1959 MPC 738: 1960 Cr LJ 83: 1959 MPLJ 1193; AIR 1960 MP 24 (25) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

——S. 366 — No persuasion by accused to prosecutrix an unmarried girl to leave her parent's house — From mere fact of being found in company of accused after removing herself from father's house offence under Section 366 not made out. 1960 MPLJ (Notes) 14.

——Ss. 366 and 362 — Apart from the element of force or fraud that may be involved in abduction and which elements may attract punishment under other sections of the Code, abduction per se of adult person is not punishable. See Penal Code (1860), S. 362. 1959 Cri LJ 852: AIR 1959 Mad 274 (DB).

——S. 366 — "Against her will" — Consent by minor kidnapped female — Value of.

(Obiter) — The principle of Section 366 is to uphold the lawful authority of the parents or guardians over their minor wards and to throw a ring of protection over the girls themselves, and to penalise sexual commerce on the part of persons who corrupt or attempt to corrupt the morals of the minor girls by taking improper advantage of their youth and inexperience Hence, the consent given by a minor female is no consent at all for the purposes of Section 366. An offence under Section 366 will lie in such a circumstance. AIR 1929 All 709; AIR 1930 All 19; AIR 1944 Bom 159. Foll.; AIR 1932 Cal 442; 48 Cr LJ 542 (Oudh). ——Ss. 366 and 361 — Out of the keeping of lawful guardian — Seduced to illicit intercourse — Girl of 13 or 14 — Induced to leave the lawful guardianship of parents by presentation of gold and silver ornaments and by persuasion indulge in unlawful sexual intercourse — Held, that the accused had committed an offence under Section 366, I. P. C. The mere fact that the mother had driven out the girl from her house did not mean that she had permanently gone out of the protection of her guardian especially when there was no evidence that she had abandoned her parents with intention of not returning to her house. Even if she had consented that would not help the accused as she was below 18 years. See Penal Code (1860), S. 361. 1958 Cri LJ 1211: AIR 1958 Orissa 224.

——S. 366 — Essential ingredient — Intention and knowledge as specified in section — Girl abducted by accused A and left by him in company of accused B with direction that she may be sold and sale proceeds shared — Possibility and likelihood that she may be married against her will and become victim of rape — A could be held guilty of offence under Section 366. 66 Punj LR 237: 1964 (2) Cr LJ 207: AIR 1964 Punj 357 (359) (Pt A) (Pr 9).

It is mistake to imagine that a single error on the part of the female will place her beyond the protection of the law punishing seduction. 59 Punj LR 564: 1958 Cr LJ 1097: ILR (1957) Punj 2003: AIR 1958 Punj 323 (324) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

——S. 366 — Applicability — Accused dragging and carrying away a woman by force —Woman not returning to house — No circumstance on the record to warrant an inference that the accused had in their view one of the objects mentioned in Section 366 — There was under the circumstances held good reason to infer that the accused had abducted the woman for purpose of confining her wrongfully and secretly — Offence therefore held fell under Section 365 and not Section 366. See Penal Code (1860), S. 365. AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 467 (DB).

——S. 366 — Person joining accused at subsequent stage of offence, whether guilty of abduction.

Even though the offence of abduction is a continuing one, any person joining the accused at a subsequent stage cannot be held to be equally guilty of the offence under Section 366 if he was not associated with him from the very beginning, unless a charge of conspiracy is established against him. ('51) 52 Cr LJ 217: 1950 Raj LW 340: AIR 1951 Raj 33 (36) (Pt E) (Pr 9) (DB).

——S. 366 — Applicability — Accused having had previous intercourse with the girl concerned — Offence.

A person can be convicted of seducing a girl under Section 366, Penal Code in spite of the fact that he had previous illicit connection with the girl. Seduction does not mean the first act of illicit intercourse. 4 Sau LR 151: AIR 1952 Sau 10 (11) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

——Ss. 366 and 362 — For abduction under Section 362 no question of consent or absence of consent arises — Use of force is also not necessary — Use of deceitful means is sufficient — Where it is clear from the evidence that the person who is charged had abducted the woman in order that she may be seduced to illicit intercourse, he can be brought under Section 366 and punished — (Cochin Penal Code (1 of 1059), Ss. 342 and 346). See Penal Code (1860), S. 362. 1952 Cri LJ 1387: AIR 1952 Trav-Co 379 (DB).

——S. 366 — Intercourse by all accused — Necessity of for conviction.

It is not necessary to bring the guilt home to the accused under Section 366 that there must be definite evidence that all the accused taking part in abduction had intercourse with the woman abducted. 1952 Cri LJ 1387: AIR 1952 Trav-Co 379 (381) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

2. "Kidnaps or abducts any woman".

——S. 366 — Applicability — Willing departure from house is no abduction. AIR 1955 NUC (Bom) 6074 (DB).

——S. 366 — 'Lawful guardian' — De facto guardian — Ingredients of offence.

After marriage, the guardian of a minor girl would be her husband. Even so while she resides with her father, he would be the de facto guardian. The expression 'lawful guardian' in the definition of the offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship would include a de facto guardian i.e. a person who takes care of a minor and who is not a lawful natural guardian of the minor.

It is true that the custody of the guardian does not come to an end by the minor merely going out temporarily from the roof of guardian, but if a minor of her own accord without any inducement or persuasion from any source, leaves the protection of the guardianship with the intention of never returning and accordingly goes away, then it cannot be said that the minor continued under the lawful guardianship or that she was kidnapped from the lawful guardianship. Kidnapping or abduction is an ingredient of the offence under S. 366, Indian Penal Code. The act of seduction is done when the girl is drawn away from virtuous course and then made to yield her chastity. AIR 1958 Punj 3, Foll. 1961 MPLJ (Notes) 65.

——S. 366 — Essentials — Ingredients of offence — Woman leaving husband's place willingly but subsequently discovering intention on part of accused of selling her for concubinage — Deceit. See Penal Code (1860), S. 362. AIR 1955 NUC (Sau) 1457 (DB).

3. "With intent . . . marry any person".

——S. 366 — Essentials — Intention — Compulsion to marry against will — Repeated requests to girl confined in place without food and drink to give consent — If "force" — Inference of intention to compel her to marry against her will.

Where it is clear from the evidence that the accused's intention in forcibly carrying a girl of 17 was not only to persuade the unwilling girl to change her mind and to accept him as her groom, but also to marry her, her refusal notwithstanding, and that he kept her confined from 10-30 a.m. to 5 p.m., while the girl was standing and crying and refused to stay and marry him, there can be no other conclusion than that his intention was to compel her to marry him or, if opportunity permitted, to marry her forcibly Even repeated requests to one who knew her limitations, namely that she was completely within the grip of the requester (accused), when she was imprisoned and was given no food and drink, would certainly amount to forcing her to consent; and even if consent were to be given in such circumstances, that would never amount to consent in law. That is nothing less than "force" in law and it must therefore be held that the requisite intention was present and that an offence under S. 366, I. P. Code, has been committed rendering the accused liable to conviction under the section. ILR (1950) Cut 185: 20 CLT 153: AIR 1951 Orissa 142 (145) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (DB).

——Ss. 366, 361 and 363—Minor girl taken away from keeping of father — Marriage or seduction, the object of accused — Accused is guilty under S. 366 though girl accompanied him of her own accord: 1962 (1) Cri LJ 841 (Punj), Overruled. 1964 (1) Crl LJ 220: AIR 1964 Punj 83 (DB).

4. Against her will.

——S. 366 — Scope — Woman willingly yielding to proposal of accused to marry him — Offence under S. 366 not made out.

Unless the intent of the accused is to compel the woman, whatever her age may be to marry against her will, that is in spite of her opposition to the marriage, an offence under S. 366, I. P. Code will not be made out. Where the evidence shows that the woman was not unwilling to marry the accused and willingly yielded to his proposal to marry and got the marriage udampady registered the offence under S. 366 is not made out. 1966 Cr LJ 210 (2) (213) (Pt A) (Pr 7) (Kerala).

——S. 366 — Applicability — Marriage should be against girl's will. See Penal Code (1860), Section 363. AIR 1955 NUC (Mad) 1219.

——S. 366 — Offence under — Essentials — Element of compulsion necessary.

The gist of the offence under S. 366 is that the accused person should kidnap or abduct a woman for the purposes mentioned in S. 366 by compulsion. Where the accused had taken out from the parent's custody the minor girl who was of mature understanding with a suggestion that they would get her married in a good family and there was no evidence on record to show that the complainant girl was in any way compelled either to accompany the accused or to subject herself to illicit intercourse with the accused, it was held that the mere suggestion that the accused would get her married in a good family did not constitute any pressure on the complainant girl to do something against her will and hence no offence could be attributed to the accused. AIR 1957 Cal 589, Rel. on. 63 Punj LR 625: 1961 All Cr R 317: 1961 All WR (Sup) 64: 1962 (1) Cr LJ 841 (Punj).

[Overruled in AIR 1964 Punj 83.]

——S. 366 — Will and consent are different — kidnapped and then raped — Conviction for kidmarry girl against her will — Case depends on facts.

Of course, there is difference between consent and will, and if it is shown that there was no evidence to show that the girl was being kidnapped with intent to compel her to marry against her will, the offence under S. 366 of the Penal Code might not be made out. But it is not necessary that the prosecution witnesses should say in so many words that the girl was kidnapped with intent to compel her to marry against her will. Every case depends upon its own facts, and the circumstances proved in a particular case might show that the girl was kidnapped with intent to compel her to marry against her will.

(Circumstances proved that the girl of 10 years was taken away with intent to compel her to marry against her will). 1952 Raj LW 476: 1953 Crl LJ 1028: ILR (1952) 2 Raj 423: AIR 1953 Raj 127 (128) (Pt D) (Prs 9, 10) (DB).

5. Intention of accused — How gathered.

——Ss. 366 and 376 — Applicability — Minor girls kidnapped and then raped — Conviction for kidnapping.

Where a minor girl is kidnapped and later on it is found that the accused had illicit intercourse with her, the accused is liable to be punished under S. 366. 1957 Cr LJ 353: AIR 1957 Assam 39 (42) (Pt B) (Pr 13) (DB).

——S. 366 — Intention — Proof of.

The existence of an intention, like any other fact, has to be inferred by evidence of conduct and circumstances, as intention is after all a matter of inference from the circumstances of the case and the subsequent conduct of the accused after the abduction has taken place.

When young girls of marriageable age are abducted, the initial presumption is that the abduction was with the intention of having sexual inercourse with them either forcibly or with their consent after seduction. Madh BLR 1954 (Cr) 28: Madh BLJ 1954 HCR 538: AIR 1954 Madh B 97 (100) (Pt C) (Pr 8) (DB).

——S. 366 — Minor girl of marriageable age being abducted — Intention of sexual intercourse with her can be presumed.

Held, on facts that in view of the fact that the girl was a minor, any evidence indicating any little consent on her part in accompanying the accused would be of no avail to him to claim discharge from the offence. When young girls of marriageable age are abducted, the initial presumption is that the abduction was with the intention of having sexual intercourse with them, either forcibly or with their consent after seduction. AIR 1954 MB 97, Foll. The accused had no other intention but that coming within the mischief of S. 366, I. P. Code. 1962 MPLJ (Notes) 45.

——S. 366 — Offence under — Intention — Proof.

Accused was charged under S. 366, I. P. C. He pursued a girl for a number of months, in order to arouse in her feelings of 'love' for him. When they had become sufficiently intimate with each other he impresed on her mind that he could not live without her. He even went to the length of suggesting that even if they could escape for 24 hours they could accomplish their object. After the girl left her father's place as a result of pursuasion the accused took her from place to place for six days during which they were found to have been sharing the same bed.

Held, that the intention of the accused in removing the girl out of the keeping of her lawful guardian was to seduce her to illicit intercourse. 1961 Jab LJ 870: 1961 MPC 649.

——S. 366 — Intention has to be established — It may be gathered from circumstances.

According to S. 366, it is the intention with which the accused kidnapped the girl to marry her against her will which has got to be established, and it can be gathered from the circumstances of the case and the conduct of the accused. 6. "Forced or seduced to illicit intercourse".

——S. 366 — Seduced to illicit intercourse — Girl, though married, had never visited her husband and yet found to be used to sexual intercourse — Question of any further seduction for illicit intercourse would not arise. 1964 All Cri R 204: 1964 All WR (HC) 303.

——S. 366 — 'Seduced to illicit intercourse'.

The word 'seduce' can be used in two senses, one wider and the other narrower. In the narrower sense, it may connote the first lapse from the path of virtue. In the wider sense, it includes every device or persuasion, every word or act, which induced a girl to submit to illicit intercourse. Indeed, every illict intercourse must be preceded by some overture on the part of the male. Though the words "seduction' 'and 'illicit intercourse" are distinct, more emphasis should be laid on the words "illicit intercourse" rather than on the word "seduction". Therefore, the word "seduced' should be understood in a wider sense of inducing a girl to carnal connection at any time or any occasion. AIR 1932 All 409, Diss. from. (1954) 2 MLJ (Andhra) 234: 1955 Cr LJ 581: ILR (1955) Andhra 290: AIR 1955 Andhra 59 (61, 62) (Pt D) (Prs 10, 14).

——S. 366 — 'Seduced to illicit intercourse'.

Any act on the part of a person to lead a woman astray from the path of rectitude is seduction and if it is followed by intercourse, it will be seduction for illicit intercourse 1955 Cr LJ 581: (1954) 2 MLJ (Andhra) 234: ILR (1955) Andhra 290: AIR 1955 Andhra 59 (61) (Pt E) (Pr 11).

——S. 366 — Intention of abductors — Inference from subsequent conduct — Permissibility.

Ordinarily speaking, when a body of persons are alleged to have abducted a girl with the intention of compelling her to marry one of the abductors or a stranger, it is reasonable to suppose that the abductors, apart from the abductor with whom the girl was going to be compelled to marry, would not have the intention of seducing her to illicit sexual intercourse. The subsequent conduct of an abductor in making improper overtures to the girl, does not necessarily lead to the inference that he had the intention of seducing the girl at the time of abduction. 52 Cri LJ 698: ILR (1951) Assam 92: AIR 1951 Assam 95 (95) (Prs 6, 7) (DB).

——S. 366 — Stages in seduction — Subsequent seduction.

The word 'seduced' in S. 366 is not used in the narrow sense of inducing a girl to part with her virtue for the first, time, but includes subsequent seduction for further acts of illicit intercourse. The words 'seduced to illicit intercourse' do not refer to the first act of seduction only when she is lured into surrendering her chastity. 59 Punj LR 564: 1958 Cr LJ 1097: ILR (1957) Punj 2003: AIR 1958 Punj 323 (324) (Pt B) (Pr 6).

——S. 366 — Seduction — When complete.

It is 'seduction' when a woman is induced to consent to unlawful sexual intercourse by enticements and persuasion overcoming her reluctance and scruples. It occurs where a man abuses the simplicity and the confidence of a woman to obtain by false promise what she ought not to give. It is a criminal offence where a female under 18 years has been induced to surrender her chastity to an unlawful sexual intercourse. Where this has been accomplished by her seducer by the use of seductive arts such as flattery, solicitation, importunity or by importing some other species of artifice, beguilement, or deception, the offence is completed. It does not matter whether the accused person achieved his object by means of brute force or she may have capitulated to the gentle promptings of confiding love by deceitful promises; his guilt in either case is established. 59 Punj LR 564: 1958 Cr LJ 1097: ILR (1957) Punj 2003: AIR 1958 Punj 323 (324) (Pt C) (Pr 9).

——S. 366 — 'Seduction' — Ingredients.

Etymologically the word 'seduction' is derived from two Latin words 'se' which means, away, and 'duco' which means to lead, and together they mean to lead away or to draw away. The term 'seduction' therefore, implies that the woman is led away or is induced to stray away from the path of rectitude. The act of seduction is done when the girl is drawn away from the virtuous course and then made to yield her chastity. But where the deviation on the part of the girl is the result of the promptings of her own inclinations, and she herself permits or encourages improper sexual reasons as opportunity comes her way, without the aid of any artifice or wile on the part of the man, it is no seduction. 59 Pun LR 564: 1958 Cr LJ 1097: ILR (1957) Punj 2003: AIR 1958 Punj 323 (324) (Pt D) (Pr 10).

——S. 366 — "Seduce" — Interpretation.

The word "seduce" in S. 366 is used in the general sense of enticing or tempting and not in the limited sense of committing the first act of illicit itercourse, so that a person can be convicted of an offence under S. 366 in spite of the fact that he had previous illicit connection with the girl. Case law discussed. ('51) 4 Sau LR 151: AIR 1952 Sau 10 (10) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

7. Kidnapping and abduction — Distinction.

——S. 366 — Scope — Difference — Kidnapping is an offence against guardianship and the moment the minor is taken or enticed away out of the keeping of her lawful guardian the offence is complete and is per se punishable unlike abduction where a particular purpose is necessary irrespective of the fact whether there is evidence that the kidnapping was with the intention of compelling her to marry against her will. The conviction under S. 363 is valid, once it is held that she was taken away or enticed away from the keeping of her lawful guardian — On facts held that the offence was punishable under S. 363. See Penal Code (1860), S. 361. 1957 Cri LJ 213: AIR 1957 Orissa 29.

——Ss. 366, 363, 362 — Scope — Abduction and kidnapping — Distinction.

In 'kidnapping' consent of the person enticed is immaterial. In 'abduction' consent of the person removed, if freely and voluntarily given, condones it. In 'kidnapping' the intent of the offender is irrelevant, but in abduction it is the all important factor. 'Kidnapping' from lawful guardianship is not a continuing offence for as soon as the minor is removed out of his or her guardianship the offence is completed, but the person is being abducted not only when he is first taken from any place but also when he is removed from one place to another. 55 Punj LR 339: 1953 Cr LJ 1790: AIR 1953 Punj 258 (259) (Pt B) (Pr 21).

8. Evidence as to age.

● ——Ss. 366 and 361 — Scope — Age of minor — Proof.

If the allegation is that the accused had committed the offence of kidnapping a minor for the purpose of illicit intercourse on a date prior to 15-7-49, when the amendment of S. 361 fixing the outside age limit for girls at 18 came into force, the prosecution has to prove as the law then was, that the girl was under 16 years of age on the date of the alleged offence. If the Court, on the evidence, hesitates to hold that the girl was below 16 on that date the accused cannot be convicted under S. 366, although the Court holds there is affirmative evidence that the girl was below 18 years.

The accused cannot also be convicted under S. 366 on the count of abducting the girl for illicit intercourse when that charge was not sought to be proved against her and there was neither evidence on record to warrant the conclusion that the girl was compelled or induced by any deceitful means, by the accused, to go from her father's place nor was any question put to the accused in her examination under S. 342, Criminal P. C. 1955 All WR 536: 1955 Cr LJ 1296: AIR 1955 SC 574 (576) (Prs 4, 5).

——S. 366 — Proof of age — Test of ossification — Sufficiency.

In the present state of the development of the medical science and the presnt state of knowledge, the Courts must proceed on evidence of age as furnished by the ossification test. Finding as regards age can be based on evidence regarding the state of ossification. 1957 Cr LJ 1114: AIR 1957 Cal 589 (590) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Ss. 366, 361 — Age of girl not established — No conviction. See Penal Code (1860), S. 361. 54 Cal WN 329: 51 Cri LJ 1486: AIR 1956 Cal 406.

——S. 366 — "Below eighteen years" — Proof — Medical evidence — Medical opinion is based on average and cannot be correct to the day — When the opinion of the doctor is that the girl is between 16 to 18 years one cannot say with certainty that she is below 18. See Penal Code (1860), S. 361. 1961 MPLJ 267: 1961 MPC 566.

——Ss. 366, 498 — Ossification test — Mother of girl not examined to prove her age — Effect — Cognizance of offence — Complaint by husband — Cr. P. C. (1898), S. 199 — Necessity.

The accused was prosecuted for having kidnapped minor wife of C from his house. The guest witness (mother of the prosecutrix) was not examined to state her age. The lady doctor estimated the age after ossification test to be 15 to 16 years. The accused pleaded ignorance as to her age.

Held, that when best evidence that of the mother and that of birth register was not produced, her estimate could not be safely accepted as conclusive on the question. The prosecution thus failed to establish that the girl was minor on the date of offence. Also that when the accused pleaded ignorance as to her age it meant that he did not accept the age given out by the witnesses and amounted to denial. It might be that the act of the accused in taking her from place to place would amount to an offence punishable under S. 498, I P Code. But no cognisance of that offence could be taken without complaint of the husband as required by S. 199, Cr. P. Code and the accused could not be convicted under S. 498, I. P. Code. 1958 MPLJ Note No. 38, Foll. 1961 MPLJ (Notes) 82.

——S. 366 — Age of the girl — Proof — Entry in birth Register — Evidentiary value — Conflicting evidence by parents regarding age — Ossification test can be relied upon — Evidence Act (1872), S. 45 — Medical evidence— Proof of age — Ossification test.

Positive evidence furnished by the Birth Register or the members of the family with regard to age, will have preference over the opinion evidence of the Doctor. But where the evidence adduced by the parents relating to the age of the girl is wholly unsatisfactory and so cannot form any basis for the determination of the correct age and if the ossification test is complete, such test can be accepted as a surer ground for determination of age in such cases. Further when there are two versions available regarding the age of the girl the accused is entitled to the benefit of the version that supports him. ——S. 366 — To convict accused of offence under section there should be conclusive proof that the kidnapped woman is below 18 years — When prosecutrix and accused were arrested on suspicion and produced before Magistrate prosecutrix stating that her age was 20/21 years — She also expressing before witnesses her unwillingness to return to her parents — Oral and documentary evidence as to her minority not reliable — Opinion of medical expert giving her age as 17 years also not reliable as his opinion was formed on a physical examination of the woman and not after radiological examination — Held, the age of the woman was not shown beyond doubt to be below 18 years and hence accused should be acquitted — Evidence Act (1872), S. 45. 1964 Cur LJ 204 (Punj).

——S. 366 — Kidnapping and abduction — Girl consenting party — Evidence as to her age — Duty of Court.

In a case under S 366, I. P. C. where the girl is a consenting party the Court should scrutinize the evidence about her age very closely. This is necessary because there is usual tendency on the part of women to understate their age in order to show their innocence and chastity and throw the entire blame on the other party. 1959 Raj LW 269.

9. Consent of minor abducted girl — Whether material.

——S. 366 — Consent of minor girl who was abducted is immaterial. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 175.

——Ss. 366, 361 — Minor removed from legal guardian — Marriage — Offence under Ss. 361 and 366 complete — Consent of the girl or girl overstating her age is no defence. See Penal Code (1860). S. 361. 1959 Cri LJ 716: AIR 1959 Ker 197.

——Ss. 366, 363 and 361 — Minor girl taken away from keeping of father — Marriage or seduction the object of accused — Accused is guilty under S. 366 though girl accompanied him of her own accord.

Where a girl of less than 18 years is taken away from the keeping of her father by the accused with the object of marriage or seduction, he is guilty of an offence of kidnapping punishable under S. 366, Penal Code, notwithstanding the fact that the girl accompanied him of her own accord and not as a result of force or misrepresentation. 1962 (1) Cr LJ 841 (Punj). Overruled. Section 366 applies, whether the offence is kidnapping or abduction and the only additional ingredient required is that such kidnapping or abduction is with the object of marriage or seduction. No intention need be established. In S. 361 which defines the offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship all that is required is that a minor under 16 in the case of male and 18 in the case of female must be 'taken or enticed' from the keeping of the lawful guardian. 'Taking' implies neither force nor misrepresentation and if a girl of less than 18 is taken away from the keeping of her lawful guardian even at her own wish the offence of kidnapping is established. Hence the fact that the girl is a consenting party does not affect the commission of the offence. 65 Punj LR 702: ILR (1963) 2 Punj 678: 1963 Cur LJ 454: 1964 (1) Cr LJ 220: AIR 1964 Punj 83 (85) (Prs 11 to 13) (DB).

——S. 366 — Minor girl of border-line age — Consent.

It is incumbent upon persons, who deal with or choose to entice young girls or who try to seduce them, to be sure of their age, and in case of doubt they must keep their hands off such girls if they want to escape punishment prescribed by penal laws. A person dealing with a girl of border-line age, always does so at his own peril, and if the girl ultimately turns out to be below the prescribed age limit, be must suffer the consequences, his bona fide belief to the contrary notwithstanding. In cases of this kind consent of the minor is wholly immaterial. (1960) 62 Pun LR 123.

10. Evidence and proof.

——S. 366 — Prosecution under — Proof — To constitute an offence under Ss. 363 and 366 it is not incumbent upon the prosecution to prove that the person kidnapped or abducted was married. No doubt, in cases of rape it has almost become an accepted proposition that a person shall not be convicted of the offence of rape solely on the evidence of the prosecutrix, yet Courts have held again and again that even in such cases it is open to them to base the conviction solely on the evidence of the procecutrix if they are satisfied that the evidence is worthy of credence. Further, the rule requiring corroboration of the evidence of the prosecutrix is generally accepted only in cases of rape and not in other cases involving a sexual offence.

So the failure of the Sessions Judge to caution the jury with regard to the evidence of the prosecutrix in so far as the offence of abduction (Section 366) is concerned does not vitiate the charge. The words "seduced to illicit intercourse" mean 'induced to surrender or abandon a condition of purity from unlawful sexual intercourse' though it is not restricted to inducing a girl to surrender her chastity for the first time but covers the case in which the girl having surrendered her virtue in the past, had returned to a life of purity at the time of the kidnapping; but if the girl was already leading a life of indulgence in unlawful sexual intercourse at the time of the kidnapping and was pregnant due to such unlawful sexual intercourse, the accused cannot be said to have kidnapped her in order that she might be seduced to illicit intercourse. Where there was an omission of the Judge to place this aspect of the case before the Jury, but there was a bare direction at the end that if the jury found the accused not guilty under S. 366 they might find him guilty under S. 363, it must be held that there was a misdirection. The case put forward by the prosecutrix was that while she was waiting on the railway platform for being taken home by her husband the accused accosted her and telling her that he knew her husband and their house asked her to accompany him. She did so and the accused taking her to lonely spot, raped her and brought her back to the station on her insisting upon it. The evidence relied upon by the prosecution and stated by the judge as evidence of corroboration was to the effect that she was absent from the platform for some time and that she was found weeping when she came back to the platform, following the accused.

Held, that those two factors stated by the judge to the jury as corroborative evidence with regard to abduction for rape did not by themselves connect the accused with the offence and therefore, the direction amounted to misdirection. (1957) 23 Cut LT 57.

SECTION 366-A

● ——Ss. 366-A, 366 — Ingredients of offence contemplated by S. 366-A — 'Seduction', meaning of — Person merely accompanying prostitute, below 18, going out to ply her profession — No offence under S. 366-A.

There are three principal ingredients of the offence contemplated by S. 366-A: (a) that a minor girl below the age of 18 years is induced by the accused; (b) that she is induced to go from any place or to do any act, and (c) that she is so induced with intent that she may be or knowing that it is likely that she will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person. A person who merely accompanies a woman going out to ply her profession of a prostitute, even if she has not attained the age of eighteen years, does not thereby commit an offence under S. 366-A.

The verb 'seduce' is used in two senses. It is used in its ordinary and narrow sense as inducing a woman to stray from the path of virtue for the first time: it is also used in the wider sense of inducing a woman to submit to illicit intercourse at any time or on any occasion. It is in the latter sense that the expression has been used in Ss. 366 and 366-A, which sections partially overlap: AIR 1930 Cal 209 and AIR 1935 Bom 189 and AIR 1929 Pat 651 and AIR 1955 Andhra 59 and AIR 1930 Mad 980 and AIR 1927 Sind 97 and 10 Burma LR 199 and AIR 1958 Punj 323, Approved; AIR 1932 All 409 and AIR 1933 Cal 718 and AIR 1955 Cal 100 and AIR 1934 Lah 227, Overruled.

A case in which a girl had strayed from the path of virtue when she was in the custody of her guardian and had with a view to carry on her affair accompanied her seducer or another person may fall within the terms of S. 366 or S. 366-A whichever applies. But where a woman follows the profession of a prostitute that is, she is accustomed to offer herself promiscuously for money to 'customers' and in following that profession she is encouraged or assisted by someone no offence under S. 366-A is committed by such person. SECTION 366-B

——S. 366-B — Applicability — No case set up of importation for the purpose mentioned in section — Conviction — Legality.

Where it is never the case of the prosecution that the girls concerned had been imported into the States with intent that they may be or knowing it to be likely that they will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person, a conviction under S 366-B, Penal Code would be wholly unjustified. 1950 RLW 340: 52 Cri LJ 217: AIR 1951 Raj 33 (35) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

SECTION 372

——S. 372 — Intention — Object in selling minor girl — Accused selling minor girl as Brahman girl for marriage to a Brahmin — Accused knowing that girl was Chamarin — Object held was that she might be forced to illicit intercourse by person to whom she could not be married. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 14.

——Ss. 372 and 366-A — Conviction under, at the same time is illegal. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 14.

——S. 372, Explanation II — Sale for marriage — Offence.

The act of sale of a minor girl is criminal not per se but only on proof of one of the intentions mentioned in the section. Further the point of time which is crucial for determining the culpability of the accused is the one when sale of the girl takes place. It is at that point of time that the intention of the accused who sells the minor has to be taken into account. If marriage is the intention with which the sale is effected, it cannot be for the purpose of illicit intercourse, nor can performance of marriage be treated as a purpose unlawful or immoral. It is immaterial if the marriage which subsequently takes place turns out to be a marriage not strictly in conformity with the tenets of the Hindu Law. SECTION 373

——S. 373, Expl. I — Presumption wider when can be raised.

In order that a presumption under Explanation I to S. 373, I. P. C., could be raised against the accused, it should first be proved either that she is a prostitute or that she is keeping or managing a brothel. Where the evidence was that the accused had not only given up her immoral trade many years ago but also that she had been carrying on for a number of years before the occurrence a propaganda for the uplift of the Bedia community by appealing to it not to indulge in prostitution, no adverse presumption under Section 373 can stand. 1959 Jab LJ 614: 1960 MPC 52: 1960 MPLJ 177.

——S. 373 — 'Otherwise obtains possession' — Includes even valid adoption.

The express words used in S. 373 are "whoever buys, hires, or otherwise obtains possession'. Even a valid adoption would be covered by the expression 'otherwise obtains possession'. Therefore, it is of no consequence whether the accused could or could not adopt the girl and whether the alleged adoption was valid and effective. 1959 Jab LJ 614: 1960 MPC 52: 1960 MPLJ 177.

——S. 375 — Consent — Interence.

The mere fact that the woman did not bear the best of character may at best only render it likely that she might be a consenting party. It would not necessarily follow that she was a consenting party. 1953 Cr LJ 1196: AIR 1953 Ajmer 12 (13) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

——Ss. 375 and 376 — Applicability — Age of girl when material.

If there be no consent, or if it be against the will of the girl, the age of the girl is immaterial for the offence of rape. 1957 Cri LJ 353: AIR 1957 Assam 39 (43) (Pt C) (Pr 15) (DB).

——S. 375 — Consent of raped girl is relevant only when she is above 16 years of age — Consent of girl below this age is no consent in law. AIR 1955 NUC (Him Pra) 1805.

——Ss. 375 and 376 — Offence under — Defence — Consent — Inference — Absence of sufficient external marks on victim — Sufficiency.

Consent on the part of a woman as a defence to an allegation of rape requires voluntary participation not only after the exercise of intelligence based on the knowledge of the significance and moral quality of the act, but after having freely exercised a choice between resistance and assent. Submission of her body under the influence of fear or terror is no consent. ——S. 375 — Rape — Essentials.

To constitute the offence of rape, partial penetration of the penis within the labia majora of the vulva or pudendum with or without emmission of semen or even an attempt at penetration is quite sufficient for the purpose of the law. Thus, to constitute the offence the evidence of the lady doctor, that there was rupture of the hymen and that there was injury inside the vagina, is sufficient. (1960) 2 OJD 437: 1961 (1) Cri LJ 689 (Orissa).

——S. 375 — Consent — What amounts to — Accused cohabiting with a girl of 13 or 14 years with her consent — Offence of rape is committed as consent is immaterial. 24 Cut LT 261: 1958 Cr LJ 1211: AIR 1958 Orissa 224 (227) (Pt C) (Pr 7).

——S. 375 — Consent — What amounts to.

Consent on the part of a woman, as a defence to an allegation of rape, requires voluntary participation not only after the exercise of intelligence, based on the knowledge of the significance and moral quality of the act, but after having freely exercised a choice between resistance and assent. Submission of her body under the influence of fear or terror is no consent. There is a difference between consent and submission. Consent of the girl in order to relieve an act of a criminal character, like rape, must be an act of reason, accompanied with deliberation, after the mind has weighed as in a balance, the good and evil on each side, with the existing capacity and power to withdraw the assent according to one's will or pleasure. Consent implies the exercise of a free and untrammelled right to forbid or withhold what is being consented to; it always is a voluntary and conscious acceptance of what is proposed to be done by another and concurred in by the former. 59 Pun LR 519: 1958 Cr LJ 563: 1957 All WR (Sup) 85: AIR 1958 Punj 123 (126) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

2. Consent.

——Ss. 376, 375 — Offence under — Prosecution must prove that sexual intercourse was without consent of the woman or against her will — Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 and 104.

When an accused person is charged with the commission of rape on a grown up woman it is for the prosecution to prove that sexual intercourse was without the consent or against the will of the woman. It is not necessary for the defence to prove that sexual intercourse was with the consent of the woman.

The complainant alleged that the accused was armed with a knife and threatened to kill her but in spite of this she shouted. There was, however, no evidence that her shouts had been heard by anybody; so also there was no reference to the knife in the complaint by her, in the same way the medical evidence did not show any injury on the private parts or on her person, there was also no injury on the person of the accused except the head injury which was caused at the time when the accused was trying to run away from the room after the husband of the complainant entered the room.

Held, that these circumstances went to show that the intercourse was with the consent of the complainant. (1961) 2 Gul LR 256.

——Ss. 376 and 375 — Charge of rape — Defence — Consent — Inference — Absence of sufficient external marks on victim — Sufficiency.

Consent on the part of a woman as a defence to an allegation of rape requires voluntary participation not only after the exercise of intelligence based on the knowledge of the significance and moral quality of the act but after having freely exercised a choice between resistance and assent Submission of her body under the influence of fear or terror is no consent. Absence of sufficient external marks on the victim showing resistance was held not to be sufficient for inferring consent on her part so as to negative the commission of offence. 1961 Ker LT 933: 1962 (2) Cri LJ 668 (669, 670) (Pt A) (Pr 14) (Ker).

——Ss. 376, 375 — Consent — What amounts to.

Where, from the evidence of the prosecutrix herself, it clearly emerged that she was a girl of easy virtue and though she was raped one after another by as many as five persons within less than 24 hours she did not complain to anybody on any occasion it would lead to the conclusion that those who had carnal knowledge of her had it with her consent. 1962 Jab LJ 825: 1963 (1) Cr LJ 686: 1962 MPLJ (Notes) 325.

——S. 376 — Scope — Consent— Inference from circumstances.

Prosecution contended that the accused committed rape on the prosecutrix on a stony ground when she resisted and scratched his legs and thighs and then went away crying. No marks of injuries on both of them were found.

Held, that absence of marks of injury on the person of the prosecutrix or on the accused, failure on the part of the prosecutrix to disclose the cause of her crying to persons at the first opportunity and absence of evidence to show that the accused could completely overpower the prosecutrix cast a strong suspicion that the sexual intercourse may well have been with the consent of the prosecutrix (Conviction set aside) 1959 MPLJ (Notes) 196.

——S. 376 — Consent — Presumption of — Accused misbehaving with prosecutrix for long time — Absence of sufficient injuries on her person — Willingness presumed.

Prosecutrix over 18 years of age stated that accused was misbehaving with her for a long time (one hour). She had raised an alarm.

Held, that this would indicate her willingness which was confirmed by the absence of sufficient injuries on her person which would have indicated determined struggle on her part. She appeared to have raised alarm only when she suspected some persons approaching her in the vicinity and made out a case of forcible criminal assault in order to hide her shame. 1958 MPLJ (Notes) 120.

——S. 376 — Evidence — Consent on part of victim — What amounts to.

Consent on the part of a woman as a defence to an allegation of rape, requires voluntary participation, not only after the exercise of intelligence, based on the knowledge of the significance and moral quality of the act, but after having freely exercised a choice between resistance and assent. Submission of her body under the influence of fear or terror is no consent. 1960 Cr LJ 927: 1960 Mad WN 261: (1961) 2 Mad LJ 459: 1961 Mad LJ (Cri) 681: AIR 1960 Mad 308 (311) (Pt D) (Pr 21) (DB).

——S. 376 — Consent of woman obtained on fear of being arrested — Offence.

The consent of a woman of over 18 years of age to a sexual intercourse obtained by putting her in fear of death or of hurt is no defence to an accused person but where the fear to which the woman is subjected is neither of death nor of hurt, but of being arrested, when as a matter of fact there is no warrant of arrest, against her, the consent though obtained by fraud, is nonetheless consent, for she is willing to allow sexual intercourse for a price, which is fictitious one because there is no warrant of arrest against her.

In such a case the accused cannot be convicted under Section 376. (1888) 22 QBD 23, Rel. on. 1955 Nag LJ 61: 1955 Cr LJ 819: ILR (1954) Nag 922: 1955 All WR (Supp) 12: AIR 1955 Nag 121 (123) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 6).

——S. 376 — 'Consent' — Surrender due to threat — Absence of resistance — Effect of.

From the circumstances that there were no injuries found on the person of the woman or on the person of the accused and that the woman had been undergoing forms of marriage with a number of persons some of whom were still alive it cannot be concluded that it was a case of voluntary consent by the woman and that she yielded her body to the accused out of her free will and volition. Absence of resistance does not necessarily imply consent.

Where a young woman of 30 years while passing from one village to another had been pestered by three police constables in uniform armed with dandas who were following her and accusing her of being a vagrant against which she was all the time protesting.

Held, that the conduct of the policeman was a sufficient threat and a surrender to them under the circumstances could not amount to a free consent. AIR 1958 Punj 123, Foll. 1960 Cr LJ 849: AIR 1960 Punj 303 (304) (Prs 5, 7).

——Ss. 376, 497 — Offence under.

Held, that even if the accused had sexual intercourse with the girl, in view of her consent and the failure on the part of the prosecution that she was below 16 years of age, it could only be said that the accused had committed adultery and not rape. 1958 Raj LW 60: ILR (1957) 7 Raj 440.

——S. 376 — Proof of age of girl — (Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 to 104).

In a case where it is found that the girl was a consenting party to the sexual intercourse and where the conviction of the accused for rape is sought on the mere ground of the age of the girl, it becomes all the more necessary for the prosecution to prove beyond doubt that the girl was below 16 years of age. Outward appearances are deceptive and a Judge cannot proceed to determine the age of the girl simply on his own estimate, without any convincing evidence. The burden of proving the age of the girl lay heavily on the prosecution in view of the fact that the girl was already used to sexual intercourse. 1958 Raj LW 60: ILR (1957) 7 Raj 440.

3. Penetration.

——Ss. 376 and 375 — Offence under — Penetration — Proof — Only uniform layer of smegma round glans penis can negative possibility of penetration — Presence of negligible amount not sufficient to negative such possibility.

It is only when the glans penis is covered by a uniform layer of smegma that the possibility of recent complete penetration is negatived. The presence of a small quantity of smegma is not sufficient to negative such possibility since a negligible amount of smegma may be present even if a person has intercourse. 1961 Ker LT 933: (1962) 2 Cri LJ 668 (669) (Pt C) (Pr 12) (Ker).

——S. 376 — Applicability — Slight penetration sufficient for offence.

For an offence of rape, while there must be penetration in the technical sense, the slightest penetration would be sufficient, and a completed act of sexual intercourse is not at all necessary. 1960 Mad WN 261: (1961) 2 Mad LJ 459: 1961 Mad LJ (Cri) 681: 1960 Cr LJ 927: AIR 1960 Mad 308 (311) (Pt B) (Pr 14) (DB).

——S. 376 — Evidence and proof of penetration.

The depth of the penetration is immaterial so far as the offence under Section 376, Penal Code is concerned. From the mere fact that there was no dilation of the vaginal canal it could not be assumed that the offence was not committed when the injury to the hymen showed clearly that there was penetration by the male organ. 1957 Cr LJ 469: AIR 1957 Orissa 78 (80) (Pt B) (Pr 12) (DB).

——S. 376 — Evidence and proof.

The simple fact that the doctor found some spots of semen by the medical examination on the dhoti of the accused or they were found on the petty coat of the girl or there were three slight bruises over the private parts of the girl is not only to prove that it was the accused who committed rape upon the girl. Of course the offence with which the accused was charged was very serious and some suspicion may be attached to him but suspiction cannot take place of legal evidence and the cirminal Court is open to do its duty of giving the benefit of doubt to the accused howsoever it may suspect that it might have been the accused who committed the guilt. Whatever may be the medical evidence, it cannot be acted upon in the face of the girl's clear admission in the committing Magistrate's Court that penetration did not at all take place. 1952 Cri LJ 1200: 1952 Raj LW 128: ILR (1951) 1 Raj 844: AIR 1952 Raj 153 (154) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

4. Evidence and proof.

——S. 376 — Evidence — Evidence of witness before Committing Magistrate retracted at the trial (S. 288, Cr. P. C.) — Witness watching the perpetrating of the offence — Evidence of victim.

H was committed to the Sessions Court for trial of the offence of committing rape on S and he was convicted of the offence; H appealed against his conviction and sentence.

Held: No doubt the trial Court correctly brought on record the statement and depositions of a witness before the committing Court under Section 288, Cr. P. Code, when he went back upon it during the trial; but his evidence could not be accepted unless there is sufficient corroborative evidence otherwise. His evidence that he was watching the offence being committed from the beginning to the end without bestirring himself in the least to prevent it or cry out for help just shows that he was nothing less than an accomplice and no reliance can be placed on it unless corroborated.

The evidence of the victim hardly carries any weight in the case and has to be corroborated by other evidence.

Held, further the case should have been reported to the J. C.'s Court for action under Section 215, Cr. P. C. and should not have tried by the Sessions Judge. It was for a Magistrate empowered under Section 30, Cr. P. C. to have disposed of the case. 1952 Cr LJ 1563: AIR 1952 Ajmer 49 (50) (Pt C) (Pr 5).

If the accused is not circumcised, the existence of smegma round the corona gland is proof against penetration, since it is rubbed off during the act of sexual intercourse. 5. Evidence of prosecutrix — Corroboration if and when necessary.

——Ss. 376 and 375 — Evidence — Rape on girl of 10 — No question of consent — Evidence of victim — Evidence of the mother — Value of — Necessity for corroboration — Sentence — Practice of recording of confession by person specially authorised, commented upon.

The evidence, in a case of rape, adduced on the side of prosecution was the victim a girl of 10 and her mother. The Magistrate believed the girl and relied on the evidence of the mother and Doctor's evidence and convicted the accused. The accused applied in revision.

Held, on the authority of the recent decision in AIR 1952 SC 54, the law is not that corroboration is essential before conviction, but that the necessity of corroboration as a rule of prudence must be ever present in the mind of the Judge except when the circumstances make it safe to dispense with it and in jury cases it must find a place in the charge before a conviction without corroboration might be sustained.

The tender years of the child victim of the offence, its demeanour, unlikelihood of tutoring and so forth may render corroboration unnecessary; but it is a question of fact in every case.

There is no legal bar to exclude the mother's evidence as not in the nature of independent corroborative evidence merely on the ground of the relationship. Independent means merely independence of sources which are likely to be tainted.

On the evidence in the case and in the light of the authority of the decision in AIR 1952 SC 54, the accused had been rightly convicted.

Considering the brutality attendant upon the rape or a girl of 10 additional sentence of whipping could have been awarded along with 4 years' R. I.

The practice of investing persons with magisterial powers specially for recording confessions and identification especially of persons having nothing whatever to do with law at any time of their life is to be reviewed by the authorities concerned:

It is better if persons who are conversant with law as enunciated from time to time by Courts and those persons alone are invested with such powers of a Magistrate. 1952 Cr LJ 1575: AIR 1952 Ajmer 54 (55) (Pt B) (Pr 8).

——S. 376 — The deposition of prosecutrix in a rape case by itself hardly carries any weight whatsoever unless it is corroborated otherwise. See Crimnal P. C. (1898), S. 367. 1952 Cr LJ 1563: AIR 1952 Ajmer 49.

——S. 376 — Conviction on uncorroborated testimony of victim — Legality — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 133).

A conviction could be based on the uncorroborated testimony of the victim in a rape case and law does not require corroboration in cases of rape though as a rule of prudence some corroboration might become necessary.

The position of a victim in a rape case cannot be equated to that of an accomplice. Even if it were so, there is no obstacle in law in the way of acting upon the sole testimony of the complainant. But the Judge dealing with the matter should indicate that in any given case corroboration would be dispensed with. In every case of this type the rule about the admissibility of corroboration should be present to the mind of the Judge. Though corroboration is not essential, the necessity of corroboration, except in cases where the Judge thinks safe to dispense with it, must be present to the mind of the Judge. AIR 1952 SC 54, Foll. 1956 Andh WR 572.

——S. 376 — Conviction can be based upon the sole evidence of prosecutrix when the evidence discloses nothing against her, either as respects her past character or as respects the truth of the accusation made by her in the case or as respects her being a consenting party to the act charged and this is particularly so when the prosecutrix is a mere child. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illus. (b). AIR 1955 NUC (Cal) 2077 (DB).

——S. 376 — Evidence Act (1872), S. 133— Case of rape on girl of 7 years depending of her evidence — Her evidence changing from time to time — Her evidence must be corroborated. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 133. 1953 Cri LJ 511: AIR 1953 Cal 206.

——S. 376 — Evidence — Conviction for rape — If can be based on evidence of raped girl alone without any corroboration — Extent of corroboration required.

In practice a conviction for rape almost entirely depends on the credibility of the woman, so far as the essential ingredients are concerned, the other evidence being merely corroborative. The necessity of corroboration as a matter of prudence must be present to the mind of the Judge, and in jury cases must find place in the charge, before a conviction without corroboration can be sustained. The tender years of the child which is the victim of a sexual offence, coupled with its unlikelihood of tutoring may render corroboration unnecessary but that is a question of fact in every case. AIR 1952 SC 54, Rel. on.

Again, it is not necessary that there should be independent corroboration. All that is required is that there must be some additional evidence rendering it probable that the story of the complainant is true. The evidence, no doubt, should tend to connect the accused with the crime. 1961 Ker LT 630: 1961 MLJ (Cr) 785: 1962 (1) Cr LJ 650 (651) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (Ker).

——S. 376 — Uncorroborated testimony of prosecutrix may be relied on.

——S. 376 — Evidence of prosecution — Corroboration — Necessity.

It cannot be said that the evidence of the prosecutrix in a rape case is on the same footing as that of an accomplice. An accomplice is a person who voluntarily participates in the commission of the crime along with others. In the case of a prosecutrix for rape, she is the victim of the offence and not the offender. The case of an accomplice therefore materially differs from that of a prosecutrix for rape and the evidence of both cannot be placed on the same footing. In law the evidence of the prosecutrix does not require corroboration like that of an accomplice. There is no doubt that in sexual offences utmost caution and scrutiny of the evidence of the prosecutrix are necessary before it is acted upon. But in assessing the value of her evidence her conduct immediately after the offence is committed is of great value and would be relevant under Section 8 of the Evidence Act. 64 Mad LW 266: 1951 Mad WN 60: 1951 Mad WN (Cri) 8: ILR (1951) Mad 973: 52 Cr LJ 718 (2): (1951) 1 MLJ 110: AIR 1951 Mad 760 (763, 764) (Prs 11 to 14).

The rule on the subject of corroboration in cases of rape which according to the cases has hardened into one of law is not that corroboration of the testimony of the prosecutrix is essential before there can be a conviction but that the necessity of corroboration, as a matter of prudence, except where the circumstances make it safe to dispense with it, must be present to the mind of the Judge, and in jury cases, must find place in the charge, before a conviction without corroboration can be sustained. ——S. 376 — Evidence — Testimony of prosecutrix — Test whether corroboration is necessary — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 133).

The test as to whether corroboration is necessary lies in the naturalness of the story deposed to by the prosecutrix. If there be any doubt as regards its genuineness, there is the need of caution, and therefore, of corroboration. For this purpose it is not necessary that the entire story should appear doubtful. It is sufficient if any part of the narration has the semblance of exaggeration or artificiality. 1955 Nag LJ 563: 1955 All WR (Supp) 109: ILR (1955) Nag 731: 1956 Cr LJ 83: AIR 1956 Nag 8 (10) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 376—In the case of rape there is nothing in law to prevent a conviction on the sole testimony of the prosecutrix. Corroboration of her evidence is not absolutely essential since she does not stand in the position of accomplice. ——S. 376 — Evidence — Prosecutrix of tender age — Necessity of corroboration — Rule —Conviction on uncorroborated testimony — Legality — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 133).

The necessity of corroboration, as a matter of prudence, except where the circumstances make it safe to dispense with it, must be present to the mind of the Judge, and in jury cases must find place in the charge, before a conviction without corroboration can be sustained.

The tender years of the child which is the victim of a sexual offence, coupled with other circumstances appearing in the case, such, for example, as its demeanour, unlikelihood of tutoring and so forth, may render corroboration unnecessary but that is a question of fact in every case. 1952 SCJ 46; (1952) 1 MLJ 440; AIR 1952 SC 54, Foll.

——S. 376 — Rape — Conviction — Uncorroborated testimony of prosecutrix — Validity.

Conviction for the offence of rape can be legally based on the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix alone. The rule, which according to the cases has hardened into one of law, is not that corroboration is essential before there can be a conviction, but that the necessity of corroboration, as a matter of prudence, except where the circumstances make it safe to dispense with it, must be present to the mind of the Judge, and in jury cases, must find place in the charge, before a conviction without corroboration can be sustained. Where the evidence of the prosecutrix is so natural and convincing and there is sufficient corroboration in the form of evidence of other prosecution witnesses the conviction can be legally sustained on the testimony of the prosecutrix. AIR 1952 SC 54, Ref. 1961 All WR (Sup) 16: 1961 All Cri R 153: 63 Pun LR 431.

——S. 376 — Evidence of prosecutrix — Corroboration — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 133).

In a case of rape there is no rule or practice that in every case, there must be corroboration of the statement of prosecutrix before a conviction can be based thereon, but as a matter of prudence, the necessity of corroboration must be present to the mind of the Judge. In the case of a girl of tender years, other circumstances may render corroboration unnecessary, but in a case where it is found that the girl was used to sexual intercourse and where it is further found that she is not giving true facts, a corroboration of her statement is very necessary.

Held, in the circumstances of the case the fact that the girl was found in the house of the accused and that it was also found that she had sexual intercourse that evening was not sufficient corroboration of her statement. 1958 Raj LW 60: ILR (1957) 7 Raj 440.

——S. 376 — Evidence of prosecutrix — Necessity of corroboration.

In a rape case ordinarily it may not be safe to rely upon the uncorroborated evidence of the prosecutrix. There should be other evidence to corroborate her. But that cannot be a hard and fast rule in all cases. ——S. 376 — Evidence of prosecutrix — Corroboration.

Ordinarily it is not safe to rely upon the uncorroborated evidence of the prosecutrix, and there should be evidence in support of her accusations. But it could not be a hard and fast rule in all cases and cases could be conceived where direct oral evidence may not be available but the circumstances of the case indicate that the woman's story is true in which event it would not be illegal to convict the accused. In valuing the evidence of prosecutrix in cases of rape extra care and caution should no doubt be exercised in order to see whether she has not got up a false story and is not involving an innocent person. ('51) 4 Sau LR 179 (DB).

——S. 376 — Evidence — Uncorroborated testimony of prosecutrix — Accused cannot be convicted on such evidence. AIR 1955 NUC (Trav-Co) 4123 (DB).

——S. 376 — Evidence — Rape by several accused — Evidence of ravished woman unreliable with reference to some accused — It is unsafe to act on her evidence with respect to other accused unless it is corroborated by independent testimony either direct or circumstantial — Evidence Act (1872), S. 133. 52 Cri LJ 874: ILR (1951) Trav-Co 164: AIR 1951 Trav-Co 167 (169) (Pt B) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

6. Corroboration — Nature and extent of.

——S. 376 — Conviction — Proof of— Offence — Victim of outrageous attack — Not an accomplice — Corroboration of evidence necessary as a rule of prudence — The nature and extent of corroboration necessary vary with the circumstances of each case — Jury appraised of the rule of corroboration — It is for the jury to decide whether or not to convict without corroboration — Necessity. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 114. 1958 Cr LJ 273: AIR 1958 SC 143.

——S. 376 — Evidence of prosecutrix a girl of 10 years — Necessity of corroboration must be in mind of judge before acting on her evidence — Conviction can be based upon her evidence — Evidence of mother relied on — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 133). AIR 1952 Ajmer 54.

——S. 376 — Evidence of complainant — Corroboration — Evidence Act (1872), S. 133.

In the case of rape of a girl of seven years old, one would not insist on the same amount of corroboration of the statement of the girl as in a case in which a grown up woman is alleged to have been raped. The circumstantial evidence consisting of the girl telling her parents just after the crime about the accused causing her injuries, admission of the accused having committed a wrongful act, injuries on the knees and elbows of the accused and blood stains on his dhoti are sufficient to corroborate the direct evidence of the girl. 1950 AMLJ 77: 52 Cri LJ 584: AIR 1951 Ajmer 60 (60) (Pr 3).

——S. 376 — Evidence of victim of rape — Corroboration necessity and nature of — The rule of prudence requires that her evidence should be corroborated — The nature and the extent of corroboration that is required when it is not considered safe to dispense with it must necessarily vary with the circumstances of each case and also according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 133. 1962 (2) Cr LJ 751: AIR 1962 Cal 641 (DB).

——S. 376 — Rape case — Evidence of prosecutrix — Corroboration of — Presence of spermatozoa found in vaginal swab — It is corroborative evidence of the prosecutrix that the accused had committed rape on her even though it was not established that the spermatozoa was that of the accused. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 157. 1962 (2) Cr LJ 751: AIR 1962 Cal 641 (DB).

——Ss. 376 and 375 — Conviction—Evidence and proof — Corroboration of victim's story — Not always essential — Nature and extent of corroboration required.

In a case of rape there is no rule of law that corroboration of the evidence of the raped girl is essential before there can be a conviction but that the necessity of corroboration, as a matter of prudence, except where the circumstances make it safe to dispense with it, must be present to the mind of the Judge, before a conviction without corroboration can be sustained. Even if corroboration were necessary it is not necessary that there should be independent confirmation of every material circumstance by independent evidence. All that is required is that there must be some additional evidence rendering it probable that the story of the victim is true and that it is reasonably safe to be acted upon. 1962 All WR (Sup) 103: 1962 All Cr R 462: 1961 Ker LT 933: 1962 (2) Cri LJ 668 (669) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (Kerala).

——S. 376 — Applicability — Accused taking liberty with the girl with her consent — No offence under S. 354 — Medical evidence not corroborating prosecutix in the matter of commission of rape — Conviction of accused under Section 376 not proper. See Penal Code (1860), Section 354. 1961 MPLJ (Notes) 73.

——S. 376 — Evidence of prosecutrix corroborated by direct evidence — Medical evidence also partly supporting it though not fully — Evidence should be taken as conclusive — Evidence Act (1872), S. 45 — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 367.

Held on facts, that the evidence of the victim was fully supported by the evidence of direct witnesses. The medical evidence also partly supported her case. Her evidence could, therefore, be taken as conclusive. AIR 1936 PC 154; AIR 1960 SC 500, Rel. on; 21 CLT 527; 23 CLT 57, Disting. Held further, that it was unlikely that a married woman at the cost of her reputation would falsely invoke the accused persons in a rape case. (1965) 31 Cut LT 909.

——S. 376 — Offence under — Nature and extent of corroborative evidence — It must support statement of prosecutrix — Evidence Act (1872), Section 5.

It is well settled that while establishing an offence under S. 376, the nature and extent of corroborative evidence would necessarily vary according to the circumstances of each case. The nature of corroborative evidence should be such as to lend assurance to the fact that what is stated by the prosecutrix is reliable and may be acted upon. (1962) 4 Orissa JD 305: (1962) 28 Cut LT 385: (1962) 1 East LR (Orissa) 213.

——S. 376 — Evidence of the girl in case of rape — Corroboration by circumstantial evidence as running away of the accused soon after the occurrence of the offence, injuries on his person, presence of spermatozoa on his dhoti and sari of the girl, statement of the girl soon after the incident to several persons who came there — Held, that the sexual intercourse with the girl had taken place and it was the accused who committed it. ——S. 376 — Nature and extent of corroboration — Four tests as to extent and nature of corroboraition applicable to evidence of accomplice laid down in AIR 1952 SC 54: 1952 Cr LJ 547, applied to complainant's evidence in case of rape. See Penal Code (1860), S. 375. AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 473 (DB).

——S. 376 — Rape — Evidence — Child victim — Statement of — Corroboration — Statement shortly after occurrence — If corroboation—Evidence Act (1872), S. 157.

Even if the victim of the rape is a child of tender age, her statement should not be received and accepted as true without any corroboration. What is the nature of this corroboration cannot possibly be stated as it will always depend upon the facts of each case. The statement of the mother of the child victim consisting of what had been narrated to her by her daughter shortly after the incident, amounts to corroboation. What weight should be attached to the evidence is entirely a different matter. It may be valuable corroboration and, on the other hand, the evidence may be worth very little: AIR 1949 Cal 613, Approved. 1950 Raj LW 329: 1952 Cri LJ 502: AIR 1951 Raj 30 (32, 33) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

7. Age of girl — Proof of.

●——S. 376 — Girl's age — Proof — Evidence.
The only conclusive piece of evidence of the girl's age may be the birth certificate, but, unfortunately, in this country such a document is not ordinarily available. The Court or the jury has to base its conclusions upon all the facts and circumstances disclosed on examining all the physical features of the person whose age is in question, in conjunction with such oral testimony as may be available. It cannot be laid down as a rule of law that in all cases of rape in order to determine the age of the girl raped the ossification test must be performed, though it is desirable, where possible. It cannot be said that the medical evidence should be rejected simply because there was no ossification test. In fixing the age of a girl the growth of the teeth, pubic and axillary hairs, the growth of the breast, height and weight of the girl are all relevant considerations. 8. Direction to jury.

——Ss. 376 and 375 — Proof of age of girl — Charge to jury — Duty of Court — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 297).

In a trial under S. 376, with the aid of the jury, on the question as to the age of the girl raped, the opinion of the doctor was placed before the jury, as also the evidence, as to the age of the girl. The Sessions Judge further told the jury that the doctor's opinion was not final. But he opined that a doctor was always in a better position to form an opinion about the age of a person than a lay-man.

Held, that it could not be said that there was no due warning as to the opinion of an expert. 1957 Cr LJ 353: AIR 1957 Assam 39 (43) (Pt D) (Pr 16) (DB).

●——S. 378 — Essential ingredients of offence.

Commission of theft consists in (1) moving a movable property of a person out of his possession without his consent, (2) the moving being in order to the taking of the property with a dishonest intention. The absence of the person's consent at the time of moving, and the presence of dishonest intention in so taking and at the time, are the essential ingredients of the offence of theft. K. N. Mehra v. State of Rajasthan, 1957 Cr LJ 552: 1957 MPC 566: 1957 SCA 364: 1957 All LJ 669: 1957 SCC 192: (1957) Mad LJ (Cr) 308: 1957 SCJ 386: 1957 All WR (HC) 480: 1957 SCR 623: AIR 1957 SC 369 (372) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

——S. 378 — Theft — Ingredients of.

Before the offence of theft is made out it has to be established that (1) the accused was not legally entitled to the property alleged to be stolen and that the complainant was wrongfully deprived of the property, (2) the means employed to take possession were unlawful and (3) the taking was without consent.

In case of a hire purchase agreement, the law leaves the parties to their own agreement in respect of various incidents of the hire purchase agreement. If the parties specifically provide in their agreement for certain situations and prescribe a particular procedure which they are to adopt and specify the means which they may use to resolve those situations, they are bound by those provisions in the agreement. Such provisions in the agreement, if they do not contravene any provisions of the Contract Act, are lawful. None of the parties can later on complain if the agreed means are used. Where a hire purchase agreement relating to a truck does not postulate the hirer being the owner of the vehicle at any time prior to the payment in full of the amount due under the agreement and some instalments are admittedly due, it is not correct for the hirer-complainant to allege that he was the owner of the truck. In truth and in the eye of law the company which let out on hire the truck to the complainant is the owner of the truck. Therefore, on termination of the contract the owner is legally entitled and the complainant is not so entitled to the vehicle. The first ingredient of the offence of theft is, therefore, lacking. Further it cannot be said that means employed to take possession of the vehicle were unlawful because force was used or because violence resulted through the resistance of the complainant. Similarly where a condition of the hire-purchase agreement grants leave and licence to the owner to take possession of the vehicles, it amounts to the hirer giving his consent to the removal of the truck. A licence given by a hirer to seize the vehicle is irrevocable. Such licence is tantamount to hirer's consent to the owner taking the vehicle. Such taking cannot, in law, amount to taking without consent. 10 CB NS 713, Rel. on. 1964 All Cr R 483: 1964 All WR (HC) 674: 1965 All LJ 214.

——S. 378 — Even temporary loss to owner comes under Section 378.

The loss contemplated by Section 378 I. P. C. need not be a total deprivation but it is enough if it is a temporary keeping out of the property from the person legally entitled AIR 1957 SC 369, Rel. on.

Where the accused by their act of removal of the lorry temporarily deprived the owner of the use of the lorry with a view to gain a temporary advantage for themselves in view of the strike at the workshop of the owner of the lorry:

Held, that the accused were guilty under Section 378, Penal Code. 1959 Ker LT 878: 1959 Ker LJ 1053: 1959 Ker LR 957.

——S. 379 — French Penal Code, Articles 379, 401 and 463 — Conviction and sentence under — Tenability.

In correspondence with the concept of theft in the Indian Penal Code (Section 379, Indian Penal Code), the French Law (Article 379 of the French Penal Code) appears to contemplate that the abstraction or taking away should be without the knowledge and consent of the owner, in order to render it fraudulent. Where, on the contrary, the abstraction or taking away is with the knowledge and consent of the owner, the act of removal per se does not constitute theft, though the offence of criminal misappropriation might be involved in the subsequent dishonest conversion of the object removed to the use of the person removing the object, or its subsequent destruction detrimental to the true owner. Hence on the established facts on record, since the inference is irresistible that the present document was removed or taken away with the knowledge, consent and willingness of the complainant (respondent), this will not be theft, though it might be some other offence. There can be no doubt at all that by virtue of powers as the Court of Cassation, the Madras High Court can set aside a conviction which is based upon any erroneous application of the law to the facts and send back the concerned appeal for rehearing and fresh judicial disposal. ILR (1964) 1 Mad 915: (1964) 2 MLJ 271: (1964) 2 Mad LJ (Cr) 562.

——Ss. 379, 414 — Scope — Guilt depends not on mere ownership of property in any one but on its removal from possession of owner and appropriation. AIR 1955 NUC (Mys) 945 (DB).

——Ss. 378, 24, 380 and 395 — Applicability — Demolition of building and removal of material — No violence — Offence — Intention to cause wrongful loss — Presumption of.

Held, on facts that the offence fell not under Section 395 but under Section 380, namely theft. Held, further that since wrongful loss was caused to the owner, it must be presumed that the act was done with the intention of causing wrongful loss. Every man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his act and it is from the consequence that the Court has often to presume the intention of the accused in doing a particular act. Consequently there was dishonest taking of the property within the meaning of Sec. 378 read with Section 24. 1961 BLJR 126: 1961 (2) Cr LJ 364: AIR 1961 Pat 362 (363, 364) (Pt A) (Prs 6, 8) (DB).

——S. 378 — Ingredients of offence — Removal with consent of complainant obtained by deceit and coercion — Offence.

Theft is defined as the removing of any movable property out of the possession of any person without that person's consent and with dishonest intention. Thus, where the accused, a Municipal commissioner, gets some letters written by him to the Chairman on which some orders have been passed, from the custody of the municipal clerk for perusal and does not return them to the clerk, but on his insistence, passes a receipt to the clerk that he has taken away the letters, and the clerk is satisfied with the receipt, it is evident that the removal was not without the consent of the clerk. It may be that the clerk, who was the complainant, was coerced by the circumstances created by the accused in parting with the possession of the letters. Even if the consent was obtained by deceit, in which case the accused may be liable for any other offence, but surely he could not be liable for an offence of theft. 1960 BLJR 326: 1960 Cri LJ 1646: AIR 1960 Pat 546 (547) (Pr 5).

2. Dishonest intention.

——Ss. 378, 23 and 24 — Dishonest intention — 'Theft' and 'larceny' — Distinction.

A person can be said to have dishonest intention if in taking the property it is his intention to cause gain, by unlawful means of the property to which the person so gaining is not legally entitled or to cause loss, by wrongful means, of property to which the person so losing is legally entitled. The gain or loss contemplated need not be a total acquisition or a total deprivation but it is enough if it is a temporary retention or a temporary "keeping out". In this respect 'theft' under the Penal Code differs from 'larceny' in English law which contemplates permanent gain or loss. K. N. Mehra v. State of Rajasthan, 1957 Cr LJ 552: 1957 MPC 566: 1957 SCA 364: 1957 All LJ 669: 1957 SCC 192: (1957) Mad LJ (Cr) 308: 1957 SCJ 386: 1957 All WR (HC) 480: 1957 SCR 623: AIR 1957 SC 369 (372) (Pt C) (Pr 8).

——S. 378 — 'Dishonestly'.

——S. 379 — Dishonest intention — Property removed in assertion of bona fide claim of right.

Dishonest intention cannot be said to be present when the property is removed in assertion of a bona fide claim or right though unfounded in law and fact. Again, if the claim is asserted in the presence of the complaint and the property is removed in his presence, it cannot be said that the property is not removed in the assertion of a bona fide claim of a right. It is, no doubt, true that a mere colourable pretence to obtain and keep possession of the property does not negative the dishonest intention but the question whether the removal of property was in assertion of a bona fide claim of right must be determined upon all the circumstances of the case, and a Court cannot convict unless it holds that the claim is a mere pretence. 1953 Cr LJ 600: ILR (1952) Madh Bha 36: AIR 1953 Madh Bha 79 (80) (Pr 3).

——S. 379 — Dishonest intention — Intent to cause wrongful gain or loss — Absence of — Effect — Theft — Gist of offence.

Section 379 of the Indian Penal Code requires that the removal of the property from the possession of another should be with intent to cause wrongful gain to himself or wrongful loss to the other person. Dishonest intention is the gist of of the offence. It is the intention of the taker which must determine whether the taking or removing of a thing is theft. When a person is prosecuted for the offence of theft it is for the prosecution to show that he was acting dishonestly. If the circumstances show that he was acting in the assertion of a bona fide claim of right, a dishonest intention cannot be attributed to him and the offence of theft would not be made out. Even where the bona fides of the claim are doubtful, the benefit of the doubt must be given to the accused and the criminal case thrown out. Such a doubt however must be reasonable one. (Tests of reasonableness of doubt and bona fides discussed).

Taking by a person in assertion of a partnership and his right as a partner and claiming to be in joint possession when supported by reliable evidence as to claim of partnership is something more than a colourable pretence and justifies a doubt. 1953 Cr LJ 1035: 1953 Mad WN 293: (1953) 1 MLJ 290: AIR 1953 Mad 516 (517 to 519) (Pt B) (Prs 8, 10, 11, 13).

——Ss. 378, 379 — Dishonest intention — Removal by one party of crops raised by other party in possession — Offence.

Where there is a bona fide dispute as to the ownership and possession of a certain piece of land between two parties and one of the parties removes the crops raised on the land by the borgadar of the other party, the first cannot be charged under Section 379 unless the title of the second party to the land and her right to raise the crops on the land was established. It is not a case where the dishonest intention, which was the most important thing to establish in a case of theft, could be presumed from the fact that the land was in the possession of the second party through the borgadar and that the said borgadar had raised the crops thereon. 1961 (1) Cr LJ 685 (Manipur), Ref. 1961 (2) Cr LJ 435 (Tripura).

4. "Moves that thing in order to such taking".

● ——S. 378 — Moving of property — Offence — Intention.

Since the definition of theft in Sec. 378 requires that the moving of the property is to be in order to such taking, 'such' meaning 'intending to take dishonestly' the very moving out must be with dishonest intention. K. N. Mehra v. State of Rajasthan. 1957 Cr LJ 552: 1957 MPC 566: 1957 SCA 364: 1957 All LJ 669: 1957 SCC 192: (1957) Mad LJ (Cr) 308: 1957 SCJ 386: 1957 All WR (HC) 480: 1957 SCR 623: AIR 1957 SC 369 (372) (Pt B) (Pr 8).

——S. 378 — Ingredients of offence — 'Moves that thing in order to such taking'.

The offence of theft is completed when there is a dishonest moving of the property even though the property is detached from that to which it is secured. But for moving the property the offence of theft is not completed, though it may still be an attempt. The section does not require that the thing stolen should be moved to any place or to any extent, or indeed that it should have been permanently displaced. If the thief moves the goods even an inch from the place where they lay, the offence would be complete even though he may then leave them alone. But even then a single motion towards changing the place or position of in any manner or towards the carrying, conveying, drawing, pushing or the like from one place to another or impelling, shifting of the subject-matter of the theft is brought home to the accused, the offence of asportation (moving) is complete. The moving must necessarily be with intent to take it dishonestly or must be connected with that intention or otherwise there may be moving but no theft. 1958 Mad WN 359: 1958 All WR (Sup) 102: 1958 Cr LJ 1198: 1958 All Cr R 330: AIR 1958 Mad 476 (479) (Pt B) (Pr 15).

7. Fish in water.

The offence of theft consists in the dishonest taking of any movable property out of the possession of another without his consent. Dishonest intention exists when the person so taking the property intends to cause wrongful gain to himself or wrongful loss to the other. There can be theft of fish from a tank which belongs to another and, if the offender catches them without the consent of the owner and without any bona fide claim of right. The ordinary rule that mens rea may exist even with an honest ignorance of law is sometimes not sufficient for theft. A claim of right in good faith, if reasonable, saves the act of taking from being theft and where such a plea is raised by the accused it is mainly a question of fact whether such belief exists or not. An act does not amount to theft, unless there be not only no legal right but no appearance or colour of a legal right. By the expression 'colour of a legal right' is meant not a false pretence but a fair pretence, not a complete absence of claim but a bona fide claim, however weak. If there be in the prisoner any fair pretence of property or right, or if it be brought into doubt at all, the Court will direct an acquittal. AIR 1962 SC 586 and 2 East PC 659

In a tidal and navigable river the fish can always come from and go into the sea though for a time they live in the river. The fish are, therefore, in a state of nature and cannot be held to be the property of anybody until they are caught. The licensee of the fishery from Government obtains nothing more than a right to fish in a particular area. If anybody other than the licensee catches fish, his act may amount to an invasion of the right of the licensee to fish. But the intention of the third person cannot be characterized as dishonest because he does not intend to cause any wrongful loss to the licensee, the fish not being in his possession. The elements of the offence of theft are not made out in such a case: 51 Cri LJ 885: ILR (1949) 1 Cut 740: AIR 1950 Orissa 106 (106) (Pr 3) (DB).

——S. 379 — Offence under — Essentials of — Criminal intention is the gist of the offence — Removal of movable property in assertion of bona fide claim or right does not amount to theft.

Criminal intention is the gist of the offence of theft and it is the intention of the taker which must determine whether taking away of the property was a theft or not.

If a person takes another man's property, believing, under a mistake of fact that he has a right to take it, he cannot be guilty of theft. Where the removal of a movable property is in assertion of a bona fide claim of right, the act does not constitute a theft although it may amount to civil injury. ILR (1964) 16 Assam 271 (DB).

A bona fide claim of right is no doubt indicative of the absence of mens rea, but the claim must be bona fide. Where there is dishonest intention, removal under the pretext of a claim of right will not take the case out of Section 315, Hyderabad Penal Code. Where the claim of the accused has been negatived by the highest Court (the High Court) in the land, the act of the accused in removing the property is not justified as being in exercise of a bona fide claim of right, and hence the accused cannot escape liability to conviction for theft. 52 Cr LJ 495: ILR (1951) Hyd 454: AIR 1951 Hyd 78 (78) (Prs 3, 7) (DB).

It is not the Indian Law that where property is removed in the assertion of a contested claim of right, however ill-founded that claim may be, the removal does not constitute theft. Such a claim might be asserted by anybody, even a thief, but it will confer on him no immunity. The assertion of a claim of right must be sufficient to create reasonable doubt that the property which is the subject of theft may not be long to or be in the possession of the complainant. 1958 Mad WN 359: 1958 All WR (Sup) 102: 1958 Cr LJ 1198: 1958 All Cr R 330: AIR 1958 Mad 476 (477) (Pt A) (Pr 9).

Where a person (vendor) acts in the bona fide belief that he has a right to take away a thing from the possession of another (vendee) and asserts such a right immediately after he is charged with theft, no offence is committed. If, on the other hand, he takes away a thing, not because he bona fide believes that he has a right to take away the thing, but with the intention of coercing the person in possession to do something, as, for example, pay the balance of the price of the thing even though he does not intend to deprive that person of thing permanently, he must be deemed to have committed an offence of theft. 22 Cal 4017 (FB), Rel. on. 52 Cri LJ 71: 1951 All WR (Supp) 9: 1951 Nag LJ 91: ILR (1951) Nag 59: AIR 1951 Nag 162 (164) (Pr 13).

In a trial under Section 379, I. P. Code, a bona fide claim of right is always a good defence. In such cases, the Courts have to examine whether the removal by the accused was under a colour of right or in other words under a bona fide claim of right or the claim was merely a pretence. Where a bona fide claim of right exists it can be a good defence in prosecution for theft. An act does not amount to theft unless there be not only no legal right but no appearance or colour of a right. 1962 (1) Cr LJ 518: AIR 1962 SC 586, Foll. (1963) 29 Cut LT 425.

The accused diverted the carts on their way to the destination and unloaded the paddy bags, one of which was found to be missing. In spite of protests made by the driver the accused persons obstructed the carts, forcibly dragged them away and unloaded the bags. It was contended for the accused that they had held back the paddy bags under a bona fide belief that they had a right to do so.

Held, that the activities on the part of the accused did not show that there was any intention on their part to restore the paddy bags to the owner nor was there any evidence to show that this was merely with a view to teach or harass the owner of the goods by way of a joke. On the facts disclosed in the case the accused were guilty of the offence of theft within the meaning of Section 378. ——S. 378 — Theft — Bona fide claim.

Where a claim of title to property is honestly made and it is not merely colourable, the jurisdiction of the Criminal Courts is ousted; and a man who honestly believes that he is taking away property from his own land cannot and ought not to be convicted of theft. Whether the claim is honest must be decided by the Court from all the circumstances of the case and it should not convict unless it is in a position to say that the claim is a mere pretence. ——S. 379 — Bona fide claim of right — Question of fact — Onus of proof — (Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 to 104).

If a person taking any movable property does it under a bona fide claim of right he cannot be found guilty of the offence of theft. It, however, depends on the facts and circumstances of the case whether there was such bona fide claim of right as claimed. Onus is always on the prosecution to make out its case and the accused is not bound to prove that no crime has been committed. Once the Court is satisfied as to the prima facie possession of the complainant then, it remains for the accused persons claiming bona fide claim of right to satisfy that there was satisfactory evidence on which such bona fide right could be claimed.

The whole test is whether the removal of the property was in assertion of a bona fide claim of right, though unfounded in law or mere colourable pretence to obtain or keep possession of property. The circumstance that the accused persons were adjacent owners of plots of land contiguous to the plot in dispute by itself is not conclusive.

Where, in a case under Section 379, Penal Code for plucking and removing mangoes from a tree prima facie belonging to the complainant, the only circumstance on which the accused persons mainly relied was the fact of the complainant having said in evidence that the accused persons had entered their names with regard to the piece of land on which the mango tree stood at the time of kistwari operation:

Held, that the complainant's admission by itself was not sufficient to show that the accused persons had any bona fide claim of right. (1959) 1 Orissa JD 414.

——Ss. 379 and 427 — Bona fide claim of right.

The complainant's house encroached upon a tiny bit of land belonging to the accused. The parties had been in dispute regarding their boundary wall between their adjoining plots. The accused in the bona fide belief that the encroached portion belonged to them demolished it and took away the materials:

Held, that in the absence of proof of criminal intent, however reprehensible or high-handed their action might have been, the accused could not be convicted under Sections 379 and 427. 16 Cut LT 78: 51 Cri LJ 1333: AIR 1950 Orissa 196 (197) (Pr 5).

——Ss. 378, 441 — Bona fide claim of right.

Where there is a bona fide dispute as to the rights of the parties, however, high-handed their action might be, the accused cannot be convicted of theft or criminal trespass. The dispute may be decided in a Civil Court and it will be improper to convict the accused of criminal trespass and theft, if acting under such a bona fide belief, they removed the crops on the land. Where in a case under Section 379 on charge of cutting and removing mango trees from a plot in a village, the defence was that the trees were in possession of a village deity and that they were cut and removed by the accused and some other persons for the purposes of the deity, the criminal Court has to address itself solely to the question of possession. Unless the prosecution can affirmatively establish that the disputed mango trees were in the possession of Government the question of commission of an offence under Section 379, I. P. Code, does not arise. Finding of a mere title of the Government is not enough. Their acts of possession must be established. 25 Cut LT 160: 1959 Cr LJ 1460 (1): AIR 1959 Orissa 207 (208) (Pr 5).

In the absence of positive evidence one way or the other, a presumption may well arise that the tree in a holding belongs to the person to whom the holding belongs and if the plot holder cuts the tree it cannot be said that he was actuated by any dishonest intention of causing wrongful loss to Government or wrongful gain to himself. (1955) 21 Cut LT 575.

11. Removal of crops.

——S. 379 — Scope — Removal of crops—Offence — Case on facts. AIR 1955 NUC (Cal) 1198.

——Ss. 378 and 22 — Standing crops if can be the subject of theft — Standing crop attached by Civil Court and entrusted with a person on Kychit — Property whether taken from his possession — Complaint may be filed by any person aware of the offence — Criminal Procedure Code (5 of 1898), Section 190.

Standing crop, so long as it is attached to the earth, is not 'movable property' as defined in the Code, but the moment it is severed from the earth its character is changed and it can become the subject of theft. In fact the very act of severance may constitute the offence of theft. O. 21, Rule 44 of C. P. Code provides that after the completion of the prescribed formalities 'the produce shall thereupon be deemed to have passed into the possession of the Court'. It is therefore clear that when the accused cut and removed the crop they were taking the property out of the possession of the Court. A complaint need not necessarily be made by the person injured, but may be filed by any person aware of the offence and the only exceptions to this rule are to be found in Sections 195 to 199 of the Code of Criminal Procedure where certain offences are stated to be complainable only by special persons. An offence under Secion 378 is definitely not one to which Sections 195 to 199 apply. Besides the person to whose custody the crop was entrusted and who had undertaken to indemnify the Court against its loss is the person who stands to lose by the accused's action. (1962) KLT 639, Foll. (1965) MLJ (Cr) 119: 1965 Ker LJ 51: 1965 Ker LT 66: ILR (1965) 1 Ker 218.

——Ss. 379, 447 — Applicability — Removal of crop — Accused claiming bona fide right in land — Burden of proof.

When it is asserted by a person accused of theft and trespass that the land in dispute was in his possession; that he had raised the crop in dispute and had a right to cut and remove the same and his assertion is supported by some evidence, he cannot be convicted for offences of trespass and theft unless it is proved beyond doubt that his claim is a mere pretence.

Where the alleged theft consists in the removal of the crop grown on the land, the most vital point to be investigated is as to which of the parties had raised the crop in question and the decision on the point will, in the majority of cases, enable the Court to come to a definite conclusion as to whether the claim of the accused person is made in good faith or is a mere pretence. 28 Mad 304, Rel. on. 1956 Cri LJ 902: AIR 1956 Mys 49 (50) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5).

——S. 379 — Cutting and forcibly removing standing crops from disputed land — Complainant in possession of land and growing crops on it at material time. Conviction of accused under Sections 147 and 379 maintained. See Penal Code (1860), Section 147. 1965 (2) Cri LJ 381: AIR 1965 Orissa 166 (DB).

——Ss. 378 and 379 — Removal of crop under bona fide claim of right — Complainant getting possession of disputed land through Court and doing agricultural operations including transplantation on the entire land — Accused removing crop while further litigation was pending in higher Court — Claim of right not bona fide.

Where a bona fide claim of right exists, it can be a good defence to a prosecution for theft. An act does not amount to theft unless there would be not only no legal right but no appearance or colour of a legal right. By the expression "colour of legal right" is meant not a false pretence but a fair pretence, not a complete absence of a claim but a bona fide claim, however weak : 1964 (1) SCJ 419 and AIR 1962 SC 587, Foll.

In cases where the alleged theft consists in the removal of crop grown on the land, the most vital question to be investigated is as to which of the parties had grown the crop. A decision on this point would enable the Court to come to a definite conclusion in majority of cases as to whether the claim of the accused was bona fide or mere pretence. The aforesaid dictum cannot, however, be treated as laying down a universal rule : AIR 1929 Pat 86, Foll.

Where the complainant on obtaining delivery of possession of the disputed land through Court did the agricultural operations including transplantation on the entire land and while litigation with respect to the land was pending in the higher Court, the accused removed the crop, the claim of the accused to the crop could not be said to be a bona fide one but amounted to a false pretence. ILR (1965) Cut 188: 31 Cut LT 601.

——S. 379 — Theft by removal of crop — Bona fide claim of right — Principle to determine.

If property is taken away under a bona fide claim of right it will not amount to an offence under Section 379, I. P. C. even though the claim may be ill-founded in fact or in law. In cases where the alleged theft consists in the removal of crops grown on land, the most vital question to be investigated is as to which of the parties had grown the crops and a decision of this point will, in the majority of cases, enable the Court to come to a definite conclusion as to whether the claim of the accused is made in good faith or is a mere pretence. This rule can at best be treated only as a general principle, and circumstances may vary wherein other factors may also be found necessary to be taken into consideration.

In the present case there being a clear finding by the last Court of facts that after the delivery of possession to the complainant of the land, the complainant had throughout remained in possession and had grown paddy crop which was the subject of theft, the accused are liable to be convicted under S. 379, I. P. C. AIR 1929 Pat 86, Applied. 31 Cut LT 679: (1965) 7 OJD 165: ILR (1965) Cut 234.

——S. 378 — Removal of crop — Claim of accused not proved — Offence — Duty of criminal Court.

When the Criminal Courts had before it clear evidence of the witnesses, examined in the case, who proved the fact that the disputed land was cultivated by the complainant's men who also reaped the paddy sheaves and kept them in the khala of certain person, from where it was removed by the accused, and furthermore, when it was clearly established that the plea of the accused regarding their previous bhag cultivation of the land for a long span of years was not borne out by any acceptable material before the Magistrate and the accused had themselves admitted the fact of removal of paddy sheaves by them:

Held, that there was no reason why the Criminal Court should shirk its duty to decide the case on the materials before it, and leave the matter to be decided by civil Court. 1959 Cr LJ 212: AIR 1959 Orissa 19 (21) (Pt B) (Pr 7).

——S. 379 — Removal of crop — Disputes as regards possession of land—Question for consideration before Criminal Court is whether prosecution had established beyond reasonable doubt that complainant had raised crops on disputed land. See Penal Code (1860), Section 143. 1956 Cr LJ 1421: AIR 1956 Orissa 212.

——S. 378 — Applicability — Person harvesting green crops grown by another person on his land commits mischief and not only theft. See Penal Code (1860), Section 425. 1961 (2) Cr LJ 265 (2) (Pat).

——S. 379 — Theft of crops — Defence — Bona fide claim of title to land alleged — Sufficiency.

In the case of a theft of crops from the land if the accused claims title to that land, that will not be a sufficient defence for him. He can only have a good defence if he can show that he has a bona fide claim to the crops which he had harvested and taken away. 4 Cal WN 190; AIR 1929 Pat 86, Rel. on. 1961 BLJR 541.

——S. 379 — Applicability — Removal of crops by five accused from land belonging to complainant — No clear finding as to who had sown the crops — Accused held entitled to a benefit of doubt. See Penal Code (1860), Section 144. AIR 1955 NUC (Pat) 3264.

12. Removal of property under attachment.

——S. 378 — Dishonest intention — 'Out of possession of any person' — Attachment by Court and custodians appointed over crop — Accused cutting and removing crop — Offence.

Per Oak, J :— Where a Revenue Court had attached certain plots and certain persons were appointed as custodians of the crop standing on the plots and accused cut and removed the crop in spite of knowledge of the promulgation of the order of attachment:

Held, that since the possession of the crop had passed to the custodians, the removal of the crop by the accused knowing about the order of the attachment was dishonest and that the conviction of the accused under Section 379 was proper. 22 Mad 151: 8 MLJ 259, Distinguished. 8 All LJ 656, Rel. on. 1956 All LJ 607: 1956 Cr LJ 1176: 1956 All WR (HC) 459: AIR 1956 All 630 (632) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

——Ss. 379 and 188 — Attachment of land under Section 145, Criminal P. C. — Removal of crops in violation of Court's order — Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 195.

Where the accused were parties to the proceeding under Section 145, Cr. P. C. and they removed the paddy in violation of the order of the Court attaching the land with the crop on it, the removal of the paddy standing on land attached and taken possession of by the Court under Section 145, Cr. P. C. amounts to theft. The effect of the attachment was that the property passed into custodia legis. As there was a dispute about the land and the crops thereon and attachment had been effected with knowledge of the accused, dishonest intention is a very legitimate inference from facts proved. It might have been possible to convict the accused even under S. 188, Penal Code, but the omission if any, in this respect did not affect the legality of the accused's conviction under Section 379, Penal Code and the trial of the accused for this offence was not barred by reason of the absence of a complaint from the Court which attached the land as it was not one of the offences to which Section 195, Cr. P. C. applies. 2 Cal 419; AIR 1943 Pat 124, Rel. on. 41 CWN 1325, Disting. 1952 Cri LJ 994: AIR 1952 Assam 109 (110) (Pr 8).

——S. 378 — Actual seizure of a bus under conditional offer of attachment — Bus taken possession of from accused — Order of attachment not made against the accused — Accused removing the bus after such seizure — Commits no offence either under Section 392 or Section 378 as removal cannot be said to be dishonest. See Penal Code (1860), Section 392. (1965) 2 Ker LR 418.

——S. 379 — Criminal P. C. (1898), Sections 144, 145 — Dishonest removal of crops from land which is subject-matter of orders under Ss. 144 and 145, Criminal P. C. amounts to theft.

When there is an order under S. 144, Criminal P. C. prohibiting the parties from going upon the disputed lands and a person dishonestly cuts and removes crops from that land, he dishonestly takes the crops out of the possession of the party who may be held to have been in possession and to have grown the crops before the order under Section 144 was passed and his act amounts to theft. AIR 1949 Cal 632, Dissented from. So also, when an order under Section 145, Cr. P. Code is in force, the person who dishonestly removes crops from the land in question takes it out of the possession of the Court and apart from other offences which may, in different circumstances, be held to have been committed, the party removing the crops may certainly be convicted of theft. 1963 BLJR 211.

——S. 379 — Scope — Removal of property wrongfully attached by owner — No offence.

Where in execution of decree against certain person's property belonging to another person is being wrongfully taken away by the bailiff and the owner and his associates take back that property, that is not an offence under Section 379: AIR 1941 Lah 217 and AIR 1915 Sind 25 (1), Foll. It is no doubt true that the proper course for the accused would have been to file objection under Order 21, Rule 58, Civil P. C., in the execution Court but simply because they did not do it and rescued their own property, it cannot be said that they acted dishonestly. ILR (1958) 8 Raj 1109: 1959 Raj LW 279: 1959 Cr LJ 1475: AIR 1959 Raj 289 (289, 290) (Prs 5, 8).

——S. 379 — Movable property under attachment — Removal by owner.

It can never be lawful for a person, even if he is the owner of an animal, to take it away after attachment from the person to whom it is entrusted without recourse to the Court under whose order the attachment has been made. Where the animals (buffalo and calf) were attached by the amin and were being taken away by the Supperddar when the accused (owner) arrived on the scene and drove away the animals by hitting at them with a lathi and thus removing them from the possession of the Supperddar, and it was proved that the accused knew that the property had been attached, the act amounts to a theft under Section 379. The removal amounts to removing attached property dishonestly. 1956 Cr LJ 1430 (2): 1956 Raj LW 490: ILR (1956) 6 Raj 772: AIR 1956 Raj 190 (191, 192) (Pt A) (Prs 10, 17) (DB).

13. Creditor removing property of debtor.

——Ss. 378, 370 — Removal by creditor of movable security for debt from debtor without debtor's consent amounts to theft.

A creditor who takes from the possession of his debtor without his consent movable property which is at best a security for the debt commits theft. The creditor cannot dispossess the debtor without his consent, in order that he may be coerced into payment of the amount of the debt. There is no question of bona fide exercise of right in such cases. The creditor's remedy is to sue in a Court of law; he cannot take law in his own hands. A plea by the creditor that he was not causing a wrongful gain to himself on the assumption that he was the owner of the property, is not enough. The creditor is certainly causing a wrongful loss to the debtor. AIR 1930 Bom 159; AIR 1951 Nag 162, Rel. on. 1963 Mah LJ 674: ILR (1963) Bom 524.

——Ss. 379 and 426 — Offence under — What amounts to — Compelling a person to pay his lawful dues by withholding his property — If an offence.

In order to constitute an offence of theft or mischief the necessary criminal intention has to be established. In the absence of such an intention the mere fact that a person removed another's property with a view to compelling the other to pay up his lawful dues, such as rent, etc., will not make him an offender. Forcible removal of property of another may amount to a tort but not a penal offence unless it is accompanied by the intention to cause wrongful loss or obtain wrongful gain. (1960) 1 MLJ 84: 1960 Mad WN 33: 1960 MLJ (Cr) 62: 1960 All WR (Supp) 9: 1960 All Cr R 81: 1960 Cr LJ 492: AIR 1960 Mad 186 (187) (Pr 4).

A unlawfully took the file from the department and for a short time he deprived the head of the Department of the possession of the said file A temporary period of deprivation or dispossession of the property of another causes loss to the other — A person acts dishonestly if he temporarily dispossesses another of his property — A's case therefore fell within four corners of Section 378. ——S. 379 — Servants of forest contractor felling and removing trees of reserve forest — Liability of contractor — Madhya Bharat Forest Act (73 of 1950), S. 26 (1) (f).

Unless the statute either expressly or by necessary implication rules out mens rea as a constituent part of a crime, a defendant should not be found guilty of an offence against the criminal law unless he has got a guilty mind. Dishonest intention is an essential ingredient of the offence under Section 379, Penal Code. The offence under Section 26 (1) (f) of the Madhya Bharat Forest Act also requires intent or a particular state of mind. There is nothing in the object of the Act or in the provisions thereunder ruling out mens rea, either expressly or by necessary implication, as an essential element of the offence. Hence where the servants of a forest contractor felled and removed some trees of the reserve forest area, the contractor is not criminally liable under Section 379, Penal Code and Section 26 (1) (f) of the Madhya Bharat Forest Act for the acts of his servants. 17. Evidence and proof.

——S. 378 — Evidence — Circumstantial evidence — Held, that the circumstantial evidence was only consistent with the guilt of the accused — Murder undoubtedly was cold blooded and committed out of pure greed —Accused was properly convicted under Sections 302 and 379. 1954 Cri LJ 743: AIR 1954 SC 279 (280) (Pr 5).

——Ss. 378, 379, 34 and 411 — Applicability — Evidence — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 114).

To bring home a charge under Section 379, it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the physical act of lifting the stolen property was committed by an offender himself. It is sufficient if it is established by evidence or circumstances that he shared the intention of committing theft with the actual thief. If a stolen article almost at the very moment when it is stolen is handed over by the thief to a companion who was with him at the time of the commission of the offence, the proper inference to be drawn from this circumstance is that the second person was in concert with him and not that he merely received the stolen property. 1957 Cr LJ 1060: ILR (1957) 1 All 494: AIR 1957 All 678 (680), (Pt B) (Pr 5).

——S. 379 — Mens rea — Proof — Necessity.

Taking away a thing without the consent of the owner and depriving him of the use of it, by itself, is not sufficient to convict a person of an offence of theft. There must be intention to take the thing dishonestly. Where a section specifically makes intention one of the ingredients of the offence, (such as under Sec. 379, Penal Code), that ingredient would not be satisfied by the application of the maxim that everyone must be taken to intend, the natural consequences of his act. 33 MLJ 729: AIR 1918 Mad 136 (2) and 37 Cr LJ 456 (Oudh), Rel. on. The question of fraudulent and dishonest intention is a question of fact. 1960 Andh LT 436: 1960 Cr LJ 1414: AIR 1960 Andh Pra 569 (570, 571) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 7).

——S. 379 — Evidence and proof — Evidence of eye witnesses — Recovery of stolen goods — Evidentiary value.

In a case of theft depending on the evidence of eye witnesses, recovery of the stolen goods is of little importance and, in the case of unidentifiable goods is altogether immaterial. (1960) 2 Ker LR 431

——S. 378 — "Dishonest intention" — Burden of proof.

Removal by accused must be with intent to cause wrongful gain to accused or wrongful loss to another — Burden is on prosecution to show that accused was acting dishonestly — Accused shown to be acting in assertion of a bona fide claim of right — No dishonest intention can be attributed — Mere assertion of bona fide claim is not enough — There must be facts or evidence in order to make out the claim of bona fide right — Proof must be adequate and fair, though not necessarily acceptable or adequate in Civil Court — Where there is clear plea and evidence of bona fide title the prosecution should be dismissed and complainant left to civil remedy—Criminal case should also be thrown out when there is doubt regarding the bona fide claim, since the benefit of doubt should go to the accused — But the doubt must be a reasonable one — Test of adequacy of bona fides of claim indicated — Bona fide claim of partnership set up, supported by witnesses — Complainant not making out case that joint possession was converted into exclusive possesion by accused — No case of theft held made out. (1953) 1 MLJ 290: 1953 Mad WN 293: 1953 Cr LJ 1035: AIR 1953 Mad 516 (517 to 519) (Pt B) (Prs 9, 10, 11, 13).

——Ss. 378, 23 and 24 — Theft — Ingredients — Dishonest intention — Proof — Prosecution has to prove either wrongful loss to owner or wrongful gain to accused — Accused can set up bona fide claim of right to property. 1961 (1) Cr LJ 685 (686, 687) (Prs 4, 6 to 9) (Manipur).

——S. 379 — Evidence — Possession of stolen property — Presumption — Nothing in statements of accused to show or suggest that stolen articles could be deemed ever to be in possession of accused — No burden is cast on him to show how he came to know where stolen articles were found. AIR 1955 NUC (Mys) 924.

——S. 379 — Complaint of theft — Essentials which prosecution must prove — Theft of crops — Material factor to be considered is as to who had grown the crop.

In cases of offence under Section 379, the prosecution must prove beyond all reasonable doubt that the complainant was in possession of the property which is the subject of theft. In cases of theft of crops, as to who had grown the crops, is a material factor to be considered. (1965) 31 Cut LT 749.

——S. 379 — Removal of property based on assertion of bona fide claim of right — Does not constitute theft — Essence of offence.

To sustain a conviction under Section 379, it is necessary to prove the dishonest intention to take property out of the possession of another. Taking of property under the assertion of a bona fide claim of right does not constitute theft. If the claim is a mere colourable pretence to obtain or to keep possession of such property and is not made in good faith, it will not be available as a defence. This will, however, depend upon the facts of each case. It is the essence of the offence that the removal must be with a dishonest intention to make a wrongful gain for himself and to cause a wrongful loss to the other. The existence of a bona fide claim of right can be a good defence in a prosecution for theft, whether the claim is a bona fide one or not, has to be examined in the background of the facts of each case. AIR 1962 SC 586; AIR 1957 SC 369, Foll. (1965) 31 Cut LT 749.

——S. 379 — Offence under — Proof of possession, an essential ingredient — Criminal Procedure Code (1898), Section 417.

In a case under Section 379, I. P. Code, where the charge is that the accused removed paddy crop from the field in possession of the complainant proof of possession is an essential ingredient. Where though it was alleged that the field in question was taken possession of by the complainant through the civil Court after obtaining a declaration of title in his favour, no one was examined to prove the fact of his possession from the date of the decree to the date of alleged offence, even though one of the witnesses to delivery of possession through the Court was still living and the accused produced one of the cosharers of the disputed land to show that he was in actual possession, the finding of possession against the complainant cannot in any sense be called unreasonable. (1963) 29 Cut LT 425.

——S. 379 — Evidence — Dishonest intention not proved — Accused entitled to benefits of doubt. See Penal Code (1860), Section 143. 1956 Cr LJ 1421: AIR 1956 Orissa 212.

——S. 378 — Dishonest intention — Proof.

It is not a correct statement to say that when the accused does not plead any bona fide claim to property he should be held guilty of dishonest intention. It is for the Court to see whether, irrespective of the plea of the accused, the prosecution has made out dishonest intention necessary to constitute the offence of theft. AIR 1955 NUC (Orissa) 3230.

——S. 379 — Evidence and proof — Evidence of witnesses not named in complaint — Testimony of — Possession of complainant not proved — Benefit of doubt held could be given — Evidence Act (1872), Section 3 — Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 367. 1963 BLJR 251.

——Ss. 378, 379 — Evidence and proof — Accused undefended — Prosecution amply establishing guilt — Accused cannot be acquitted merely on ground that prosecution witnesses were not cross-examined. Evidence Act (1872), Secs. 137, 138 — Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 256. (1964) 66 Pun LR 1105.

——Ss. 378 and 379 — Dishonest intention — Ingredients of theft having been proved it lies on accused to show that there had been no dishonest intention — (Evidence Act (1872), Section 114). AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 4646 (DB).

——Ss. 378, 441 — Questions of title and past possession — Relevancy.

In a case of theft of crop and criminal trespass question of title and of past possession will incidentally arise and cannot be ignored altogether. They become relevant for the purpose of appreciating the evidence of the present possession of the land: AIR 1944 Pat 274, Rel. on. 5 Sau LR 9: 1952 Cri LJ 1098: AIR 1952 Sau 22 (22) (Pt A) (Pr 2) (DB).

——S. 379 — Proof of theft — Burden of proof — Accused removing jack-fruits, etc., from ail of complainant — Plea of bona fide claim would be good defence — Theft can be established only by proof of dishonest intention of accused and not by proof of illegality — (Evidence Act (1872), Sections 101 to 104). 1965 (2) Cr LJ 810: AIR 1965 Tripura 42 (43) (Pr 9).

——Ss. 378, 379 — Claim of right — Mere removal from possession of complainant not sufficient — Dishonest intention on part of accused must be proved — In order to prove dishonest intention question of title is relevant.

To prove an offence of theft, dishonest intention of the accused in removing the property has to be established. In order to prove dishonest intention the question of title to the property certainly will enter into the picture. A bona fide claim of right would be a good defence in a charge of theft. Theft can be established only by proof of the dishonest intention and not by proof of illegality. The accused may be liable for such illegality in tort or under civil law or may be guilty under some other section of the Penal Code.

Held, on facts that the case of the fish in the tank could not be taken separately from the ownership of the tank. The accused caught and removed the fish on their claim of right to the tank and to the fish therein which had been upheld by the Civil Court. It could not, therefore, be said that the dishonest intention had been proved against the accused. The general rule is that a complaint need not necessarily be made by the person injured, but may be filed by any person aware of the offence and the only exceptions to this rule are to be found in Sections 195 to 199 of the Code of Criminal Procedure where certain offences are stated to be complainable only by specified persons. The Courts have no power to add to the list. An offence under Section 379, I. P. Held : Instituting a case of theft under Section 379, Penal Code, under the circumstances, practically amounts to an abuse of process of Courts. ——Ss. 380, 411 — Applicability — Conditions.

Before convicting anybody of an offence either under Section 380 or Section 411, it is essential that the goods should be proved to have been stolen or misappropriated. Once a person is found in possession of stolen property certain presumptions follow and he is on explanation at the risk of being otherwise convicted either for the theft or under Section 411. But then it should already be stolen property (for the purpose of Section 411) that is, the Court should be able to come to the conclusion that the offence of theft or criminal misappropriation has been committed in respect of it.

The mere fact that certain medical ampules marked with the Government Hospital identity marks were found in a chemist's shop, is not sufficient to convict the owner of the shop under Section 380 or Section 411, unless it is established that the ampules of this particular batch were found missing or stolen from the Hospital stores. 1960 MPLJ 854: 1960 MPC 469: 1960 Jab LJ 832: 1960 Cr LJ 1620: AIR 1960 Madh Pra 395 (396, 397) (Prs 2, 4) (DB).

——Ss. 380, 378, 24, 395 — Demolition of building and removal of material — No violence used — Offence is theft and not dacoity — Wrongful loss to owner — Intention to cause wrongful loss can be presumed — There is therefore dishonest taking. 2. Evidence and proof.

——S. 380 — Evidence and proof — Recovery of stolen articles at instance of accused from open field accessible to all and sundry — Exclusive possession of articles by accused held not conclusively proved to sustain conviction under Section 380 — Evidence Act (1872), Section 114. [Reversed in AIR 1962 SC 586.]

——Ss. 380 and 457 — Applicability — Evidence — Fact that the accused leading police to spot of concealment not only proving that he knew where incriminating articles were but materially supporting story given by approver who alleged that accused took part in theft — It cannot be said that accused could be convicted only under Section 411 and not under Section 380 or 457. ——S. 380 — Identity of material objects — Discrepancy as to content or carat of gold or shape or name of watch whether fatal — Evidence Act (1 of 1872), Section 114 (a) — Possession of stolen property seized after thirty days — Presumption from nature of property recovered.

The fact that both the wrist-watch and the bracelet were seized together is a point of some significance in establishing the identity of both. The discrepancies as to the content or carat of the gold in Exhibit P-3 report made by P. W. 5 and in the evidence of P. W. 4 are of no moment because as testified by P. W. 5 his reading of the same was only an approximation.

Other discrepancies, if they were really so, as to the shape of the watch or the name are inconsequential.

In order to put the accused on his defence, his possession of the stolen property must be recent; although what shall be deemed recent possession must be determined by the nature of the articles stolen, i.e., whether they are of a nature likely to pass rapidly from hand to hand; or of which the accused would be likely, from his situation in life, or vocation to become possessed innocently. 1962 Ker LT 759: 1962 Ker LJ 840: (1963) MLJ (Cr) 401.

A claim of right asserted in defence against prosecution for theft must be an honest one, albeit unfounded in law or in fact and if it is not in good faith but merely a colourable pretence to obtain or keep possession of the property, it will not avail as a defence. AIR 1917 Cal 648, Rel. on.

Where A broke open the lock of a room and removed a box of ornaments belonging to B, his sister-in-law, alleging that he considered the ornaments to be joint family property in which he had a share and not the stridhan property of B, and it was found, in fact, that they were the stridhan property of B, and not ancestral property liable to partition:

Held, that in view of these findings for which there was adequate material on record, A's asserted claim of right could not be said to be bona fide and was a mere colourable pretence to retain possession of property to which he was not entitled. A's conviction under Sections 380 and 454 was, therefore, proper: Case law discussed.

Held, further, that the case was not, however, one for severe punishment. Although A acted with highhandedness and by taking the law into his own hands caused wrongful loss to B and wrongful gain to himself, he was not an ordinary thief or housebreaker. He was related to B by marriage and was suffering from the obsession that the other members of the family were depriving him of a share in the family property. The sentence of imprisonment should, in the circumstances, be set aside and replaced by concurrent imprisonment until the rising of the Court under each of the aforesaid sections. The fine awarded, viz., Rs. 100, however, to be increased to Rs. 200. 51 Cri LJ 510: 1950 Nag LJ 346: ILR (1950) Nag 526: AIR 1950 Nag 92 (94) (Prs 8, 12, 14).

Held, (i) that it was not unoften that a particular act in some of its aspects came within the definition of a particular offence in the Penal Code, while in other aspects, or taken as a whole, came within another definition. There were obvious differences between the offence of extortion as defined in Section 383 and the offence of criminal intimidation as defined in Sec-

(ii) It was true that the charge as framed against the appellant was not as clear as it might have been. It is true that for the same act prosecution under Section 22 of the Cattle Trespass Act may lie against the offenders. SECTION 390

——S. 390 — Applicability—Theft when robbery. Theft will become robbery only if in the committing of theft or in order to the committing of theft or carrying away or attempting to carry away property obtained by theft, force is used. Where, therefore, no force or show of force is found to have been used in the committing of theft, etc., the accused cannot be found guilty of the offence of robbery. AIR 1952 All 785, Disting. 1954 All WR (HC) 510: 1954 All LJ 670: 1955 Cr LJ 336: AIR 1955 All 128 (130) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

——S. 390 — Applicability — When theft becomes robbery — Accused leaving subject-matter of theft and running — When challenged by one of pursuers returning and attacking him — Robbery is not committed because violence was used to destroy evidence of identification and that will not convert theft into robbery. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 4439.

——Ss. 390, 392 and 302 — Conviction — Separate convictions — Accused carrying away stolen property apprehended by owner — Accused striking him with knife and killing him — Accused can be convicted both under Section 392 and Section 302. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 3573 (DB).

——S. 390 — Ingredients of 'robbery' — 'For the end' — Implications of — Hurt or violence caused at the time of theft — Inference — If can be said to be caused for purpose of theft.

Before theft can amount to 'robbery' the offender must have voluntarily caused or attempted to cause to any person death or hurt or wrongful restraint, or fear of instant death or of instant hurt or of instant wrongful restraint. The second necessary ingredient is that this must be in order to the committing of the theft, or in committing the theft, or in carrying away or attempting to carry away property obtained by the theft. The third necessary ingredient is that the offender must voluntarily cause or attempt to cause to any person hurt, etc., for that end.

Where two views can be taken as to the object for which violence had been used by the accused, it would be safer to take the view which is more favourable to the accused. (1961) 2 Guj LR 678: 1962 (2) Cr LJ 415 (416, 417) (Pr 20) (DB).

——Ss. 390, 392 — Applicability — Theft accompanied by force — Offence under Section 392 made out. AIR 1955 NUC (Him Pra) 4302.

——S. 390 — Robbery and murder as part of the same transaction — Recent and unexplained possession of stolen property is not only presumptive evidence against accused on charge of robbery but also on charge of murder — Murder by child below 16 years — Sentence — More appropriate section for dealing with accused under the Children Act (Travancore, 1120), is Section 33. See Penal Code (1860), Sec. 300. 1956 Ker LT 279: 1965 Ker LJ 385.

●——Ss. 390 and 300 — Stolen property of deceased found in possession of accused — Justifies an inference that they took part in robbery. See Penal Code (1860), Section 300. 51 Cri LJ 1265: AIR 1950 Madh Bha 76 (FB).

——Ss. 390, 383, 392 — Dishonest intention — Accused extracted his remuneration as a village barber before it became due from malguzar by putting him in instant fear of hurt — Accused held guilty of extortion. See Penal Code (1860), Section 383. AIR 1950 Nag 214.

——S 390. — Essential ingredients — Section 399. The definition of robbery requires that either death or hurt, wrongful confinement is caused or the victims put in fear of such result. Merely because the accused were armed with lathis when they removed the articles from the person of the victims it cannot be held that the accused had committed the offence of robbery. It cannot be said that the very presence of the accused armed with lathis in front of the victims amounts to wrongful confinement in law. There must be some evidence of any injury caused to the victims or use of force towards them. AIR 1933 All 114, Dissented from. 24 Cut LT 70: ILR (1958) Cut 169: 1959 Cri LJ 1203: AIR 1959 Orissa 171 (173) (Pr 6).

——S. 390 — Applicability — Force used in carrying goods — Offence — Section 379.

When force is used when the person who had obtained or taken the goods was in the process of carrying or attempting to carry them, the offence is robbery and not theft. 1958 BLJR 238.

——Ss. 390 and 391 — "For that end" — Violence used in attempt to escape and not to commit theft — This is no dacoity.

One important portion of the definition of "robbery" is the words "for that end". In other words, the violence must be used for the purpose of achieving the end of theft. If violence is used for any other purpose then it cannot be said to be a robbery. Thus where theft has already been committed and the thieves cause injuries in their attempt to escape and because one of their companions was being assaulted and not to commit theft, the element of robbery is wanting and it cannot therefore be said that there is a dacoity committed. 1956 BLJR 473: 1956 Pat LR 108.

——S. 390 — Ingredients — Accused setting out to remove paddy bundles — One of them caught hold of by complainant and assaulted — Accused returning the assault — Case held did not fall under Section 390. AIR 1955 NUC (Pat) 443.

——Ss. 390, 379 — Theft when becomes robbery — Assault must be found to have been committed for purpose of committing theft, or carrying away or attempting to carry away property obtained by theft. See Penal Code (1860), Section 379. 1954 Cri LJ 215: AIR 1954 Pat 157 (DB).

——Ss. 390, 392 and 379 — Applicability — Theft or robbery — "Carrying away", means if fear of death, hurt or wrongful restraint is caused after committing theft, in order to carry away property obtained by theft, offence would be robbery — Fear of death after offenders make good their escape with property — Case will not be robbery. AIR 1955 NUC (Punj) 3440.

——S. 390 — No mention in F. I. R. that accused had murdered a boy and removed ornaments from his body and had sold them — From prosecution evidence also it cannot be concluded that he caused the death of the boy and stole the ornaments from his person — Conviction for murder and robbery cannot be sustained. See Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 367. 1952 Raj LW 140: ILR (1951) 1 Raj 806.

——Ss. 390, 394, 397 and 379 — Theft when amounts to robbery.

Theft is robbery if, in order to the committing of the theft, or in committing the theft, or in carrying away or attempting to carry away property obtained by the theft, the offender, for that end, voluntarily causes or attempts to cause to any person hurt etc. The words 'for that end' in Section 390 clearly mean that the hurt caused must be with the object of facilitating the committing of the theft or must be caused while the offender is committing theft or is carrying away or is attempting to carry away property obtained by the theft. It does not merely mean that the assault or the hurt must be caused in the same transaction or in the same circumstances. AIR 1941 Oudh 476; AIR 1918 Mad 821 and AIR 1933 Lah 407, Ref.

Where hurt was caused first and theft was the last act of the accused:

Held, that offence, if any, was mere theft and not robbery. 5 Sau LR 21: 1953 Cri LJ 909: AIR 1953 Sau 85 (86) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

SECTION 391

——S. 391 — Dacoits unsuccessful in removing any booty — Dacoity if committed.

The word 'dacoity' has been defined not only where a robbery is committed by five or more persons but where five or more persons had attempted to commit a robbery. In view of the definition of a dacoity the argument that, as the dacoits were unsuccessful in removing any booty, no dacoity was committed, is misconceived. 1951 All LJ 567: 52 Cri LJ 1514: 1951 All WR (HC) 588: 1951 All Cr C 146: AIR 1951 All 834 (835) (Pt B) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Ss. 391 and 395 — Offence of dacoity — Accused, more than 5, breaking open house and removing material after dismantling it — Accused chasing and threatening to beat servant of owner in charge of house, when he stopped them from breaking open the house — Ingredients of offence of dacoity held made out. 51 Cri LJ 1244: ILR (1951) 2 All 660: AIR 1950 All 471 (474) (Pt D) (Pr 26) (DB).

——S. 391 — Five accused charged — One acquitted — Rest cannot be convicted — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 439).

Where five persons were charged under Section 395, and it was not the prosecution case that there were any more persons who took part in the dacoity, and one of the accused was acquitted, the remaining four accused cannot be convicted under Section 395. AIR 1957 Andh Pra 954, Rel. on.

(On the facts of the case, instead of remanding the case to see if the accused could be convicted for lesser offence, his Lordship acquitted the accused — AIR 1954 SC 51, Rel. on.) 1958 Cr LJ 1001: AIR 1958 Andh Pra 510 (511, 512) (Prs 7, 9).

——S. 391 — Essence of offence — Common object.

The essence of the offence of dacoity is the conjoint act of five or more persons to commit or attempt to commit robbery. Only for acts committed by one of the members of the unlawful assembly in pursuance of the common object, could all of them be found guilty.

Thus where the accused were actuated by the common object of rescuing certain persons from the custody of the Prohibition Guards and in attempting to rescue them, one of the members of the unlawful assembly suddenly seized an object in the hands of one of the officers, it could not be said that it was the conjoint act of all the members of the mob and hence the essential ingredient to constitute an offence of dacoity is absent. (1954) 2 MLJ (Andhra) 248.

——S. 391 — Conjointly.

The word 'conjointly' is the most important word bearing on the liability of persons accused of an offence of dacoity. While it may be true to say that common intention is no part of the offence of dacoity, the word 'conjointly' used in S. 391 manifestly refers to united and concerted action of the persons participating in the transaction. If individual acts of persons cannot reasonably be referred to a united or concerted action of such persons, there cannot be any question of any conviction for dacoity of the group of persons concerned.

The prosecution case was that the accused persons in a body surrounded the complainant's cart to see if it carried any paddy. The complainant who was following the cart on a bicycle resented this interference and had an altercation with the accused. Some of the accused got infuriated and began to assault the complainant and his companion and ultimately dispersed after taking away their bicycles. There was no grain in the cart and nothing was removed from it.

Held, that the original concerted action which the accused persons might have had in view came to an end with the assault on the complainant and his companion and if thereafter some of the accused acted individually and removed bicycles, it could not be said that the other persons were acting conjointly with those who removed the bicycles, so as to make each of them liable for theft or dacoity. 52 Cri LJ 1380: ILR (1951) 3 Assam 365: AIR 1951 Assam 143 (2) (143) (Pt B) (Pr 2) (DB).

——S. 391 — Dacoity — Sufficiency of evidence. Where the evidence was that some persons on the top of the house of another person got into the house through the skylight and carried away some bags.

Held, that that could not obviously be construed as evidence sufficient for sustaining a specific charge of dacoity. 65 Mad LW 238: 1952 Mad WN 369: 1952 Mad WN Cr 81: (1952) 2 Mad LJ 7: 1953 Cri LJ 29: AIR 1952 Mad 821 (824) (Pt E) (Pr 19).

——S. 391 — Essentials — Mere presence with others not sufficient — Evidence of committing or aiding commission of robbery necessary. 1962 (1) Cri LJ 168: AIR 1962 Manipur 7 (9) (Pt A) (Pr 12).

——S. 391 — Out of five accused challaned, two acquitted on ground that only three had taken part in committing offence — These three held could not be convicted under Section 395 for offence of dacoity cannot be committed by persons less than five (obiter). 1952 Raj LW 223: 1953 Cri LJ 447: ILR (1952) 2 Raj 177: AIR 1953 Raj 49 (51) (Pt C) (Pr 5).

——S. 391 —Scope — "Common intention" — If should be shared by all accused.

Under Section 391, Penal Code, it is necessary that all the persons should share the common intention of committing robbery. 1956 Cri LJ 1021: AIR 1956 Vin Pra 18 (18) (Pt B) (Pr 1).

SECTION 392

——Ss. 392, 34, 302 — Circumstantial evidence — Recent possession of stolen property belonging to murdered man — Charge of murder and robbery against three persons — No mention of Section 34 in charge — Two of them acquitted — Conviction of remaining accused under Sections 302 and 392 held justified. See Penal Code (1860), Section 34. 1956 Cri LJ 790: AIR 1956 SC 400.

——S. 392 — Illegal and unauthorised seizure of account books from factory of Excise Department Officer — Owner does not commit offence under Section 392 in recovering them — If force is used in recovering books, case falls under Section 354 — Agent's possession is principal's possession. See Penal Code (1860), Section 352. 1965 (2) Cri LJ 582: AIR 1965 All 543.

——S. 392 — Evidence of identification — Appreciation of — One of most important factors for consideration is whether there was sufficient light for features of an unknown person being well seen by witnesses. See Evidence Act (1872), Section 9. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 5287 (DB).

——S. 392 — Scope — Separate convictions under Sections 392 and 302 — Accused in carrying away stolen property apprehended by owner of property — Accused striking him with a knife and killing him — He can be convicted both under Sections 392 and 302 as he has committed two separate offences. See Penal Code (1860), Section 390. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 3573 (DB).

——Ss. 392, 302 — Murder and robbery — Circumstantial evidence — On evidence accused held guilty under Sections 302 and 392. See Penal Code (1860), Section 302. 1965 (2) Cri LJ 63: AIR 1965 Andh Pra 251 (DB).

——Ss. 392 and 411 — Theft and retention of stolen goods form one and same offence and not to be punished separately — Conviction under Section 392 — Conviction and sentence under Section 411 improper.

Considering the language of Section 411, dishonest retention is contradistinguished in that section from dishonest reception. In the former offence dishonesty supervenes after the act of acquisition of possession, while in the latter dishonesty is contemporaneous with the act of acquisition. The act of dishonest removal within the meaning of Section 379 constitutes dishonest reception within Section 411 and that being so the thief does not commit the offence of retaining stolen property merely by continuing to keep possession of the property he stole. The theft and taking and retention of stolen goods form one and the same offence and cannot be punished separately.

Hence where the accused is convicted and sentenced under Section 392, his conviction and sentence under Section 411 cannot be sustained. Case law relied on. 51 Cri LJ 581: 1950 All WR (Supp) 15: 1950 All Cri Cas 32: AIR 1950 East Punj 66 (68, 69) (Prs 24, 27).

——S. 392 — Applicability — Theft accompanied by force — Offence under Section 392 held made out. See Penal Code (1860), Section 390. AIR 1955 NUC (Him Pra) 4302.

——S. 392 — Scope — Robbery or theft in dwelling house — Held, in circumstances, murder could not be said to have any connection with theft and hence offence committed by accused fell under Section 380 and not Section 392. ——Ss. 392, 404 — Murder and robbery committed in same transaction — Offence falls under Section 392 — 'Person' does not exclude dead body in such a case.

Where murder and robbery are committed in the course of the same transaction by the same person, the offence would fall under Section 392 and not under Section 404. In that contest, the word 'person' cannot be so narrowly construed as to exclude the dead body of a human being who was killed in the course of the same transaction in which theft was committed. The matter would be different if a thing is stolen from a dead body apart from the transaction in which death occurred. 1962 MPLJ 1064: 1962 Jab LJ 876: 1963 (1) Cr LJ 433: ILR (1963) Madh Pra 730: AIR 1963 Madh Pra 106 (114) (Pt I) (Pr 34) (DB).

Held, on facts, (1) that there was no bar against the endorsement of a warrant in favour of more than one person; (2) that the Tahsildar having failed to mention the extended date in the warrant and having also failed to issue a new warrant the Revenue Inspector was not competent to execute the warrant on 30-8-1962 and they were not in the lawful discharge of the public functions. The accused persons having offered resistance to the execution of such a warrant could not be treated as having assaulted public servants in the discharge of their public duties or to have committed an offence under Section 392, I. P. C. in removing their own cattle from the possession of the Revenue Inspector. The attachment having been void ab initio the accused persons in taking their father's property committed no offence of theft and consequently, no offence of robbery. 1964 Raj LW 617: ILR (1965) 15 Raj 166.

Held, that the beating was primarily for the purpose of the theft which took place immediately after the assault. There was but one transaction, namely, a robbery. ——Ss. 394, 397 and 404 — Murder — Removal of ornaments from dead body — Offence.

Removal of ornaments from body of one after causing his death, cannot amount to robbery because robbery is theft by force and theft is taking movable property out of possession of a person. If the act of theft had taken place while the person murdered was alive, it would have been robbery (Section 394 read with Section 397) but removing ornaments from a dead body is not taking ornaments out of the possession of a person. A dead body is not a person. In the circumstances, the act of the accused amounts to dishonest misappropriation of property possessed by the deceased and is an offence under Section 404, Penal Code. 1958 All LJ (Rev) 76: 1958 MPC 247: 1958 All WR (Sup) 84: 1958 Cr LJ 902: 1958 All Cr R 282: 1958 MPLJ 398: AIR 1958 Madh Pra 192 (193) (Pr 9) (DB).

Dacoity is perhaps the only offence which the legislature has made punishable at four stages. When five or more persons assemble for the purpose of committing a dacoity, each of them is punishable under S. 402 of the Penal Code merely on the ground of joining the assembly. Another stage is that of preparation, and if any one makes preparation to commit a dacoity, he is punishable under S. 399. The definition of 'dacoity' in S. 391 shows that the other two stages namely, the stage of attempting to commit, and the stage of actual commission of, robbery, have been treated alike and come within the definition. 1960 BLJR 511: 1960 Cri LJ 1650: AIR 1960 Pat 582 (586) (Pt F) (Pr 24).

C. (1898), S. 423).

Where the accused and his companions who numbered five or more than five attempted to commit robbery at the house of A, but on a hue and cry being raised took to their heels without any booty, there was attempt to commit robbery and the accused would be punishable under Section 395.

There was clear attempt at robbery but it did not comprise the carrying away or attempting to carry away property obtained by theft. Since no theft was committed nor were the dacoits engaged in carrying away or attempting to carry away the property, the transaction of dacoity stopped short at the mere attempt to commit robbery. 3 Cr LJ 294 (All), Disting.

Held, even if the accused could not be convicted under S. 396, he could be convicted under Section 302. The accused could be convicted of the offence under S. 302, since such a charge could be made out against him. Shyam Behari v. State of U. Where a person is not guilty under S. 395, Penal Code for committing a dacoity but where the looted property is found in his possession and he has knowledge that it is looted property, he can be held guilty under S. 412, Penal Code: but where he is convicted under S. 395 for committing a dacoity and it is in the course of that dacoity that the property which is found in his possession came to him he cannot be held guilty both under Ss. 395 and 412. ——S. 395 — Sentence — Mitigating circumstance.

A dacoity is actuated by the contemptible motive of appropriating property lawfully belonging to another. The crime itself is difficult to trace, and only a small proportion of the criminals taking part are arrested; even then it is often difficult to secure the conviction of more than a fraction of them. For these reasons it is a grievous mistake to treat dacoits lightly in the matter of punishment. Accordingly, unless there is satisfactory proof of the existence of mitigating circumstances, the sentence on dacoits should invariably be heavy and deterrent.

A reasonable circumstance in mitigation can be the extreme youth of an offender, for in his case it is arguable that he acted under the domination of the will of his seniors. There can also be what for the sake of convenience might be termed a 'technical dacoity' for example, where two parties in a village have a dispute over some agricultural land and one of them numbering five or more forcibly harvests the crop and removes it. But where the dacoity is a real one, the normal sentence under S. 395 should be seven years' rigorous imprisonment together with fine.

Where fire-arms have been used or the village people injured or cruelly treated or their womenfolk dishonoured ten years would be more appropriate. Gang-leaders and previous convicts deserve to be punished even more severely. Leniency to those who are old enough to understand the nature and consequences of their acts is indefensible, and in the interest of society it is imperative for criminals to be made to learn that dacoity will not pay. 1956 All WR (HC) 1: 1956 Cr LJ 358 (2): 1956 All LJ 206: AIR 1956 All 163 (166, 167) (Pt B) (Prs 15, 19) (DB).

——S. 395 — Sentence — Fine — Adequacy of.

A sentence of fine is not appropriate in dacoity cases. The dacoits are generally persons of little or no means. Where there are also sentences of long term imprisonment, it simply means that the sentence of fine will cause hardship and suffering to the unfortunate members of their family, who have been deprived of their breadwinner. Such sentences generally result in what small property there may be being sold up during the absence of the convict in jail, and his womenfolk being severely harassed through no fault of their own. 47 Cr LJ 78, Rel. on. (1958) 1 An WR 9: 1957 An LT 709: ILR (1957) Andh Pra 742: 1958 MLJ (Cri) 31: 1958 Cr LJ 343: AIR 1958 Andh Pra 165 (170) (Pt E) (Pr 22) (DB).

Where seven persons only were charged for the offence of a dacoity but the Court acquitted four of them for want of proof, the conviction of the remaining three accused under S. 395, I. P. ——Ss. 395 and 412 — Simultaneous convictions under — Legality — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 236).

There is no statutory prohibition against conviction under both S. 395 and S. 412, Penal Code. On principle, if the criminal act is only a single act coming within the definition of two distinct offences, there should not be a conviction for both the offences. Where the act of dacoity in respect of which there has been a conviction under Section 395 does not necessarily involve a transfer of possession of the property which is punishable under S. 412 and the evidence relating to the participation in the robbery is distinct from that relating to the subsequent possession and it is quite likely that there was a separate act of division of the spoils by which the possession of the stolen property was transferred, simultaneous convictions under S. 395 and S. 412 are not illegal. 1956 Andh LT 915.

——Ss. 395, 392, 394 — Five persons charged for dacoity — Acquittal of one — Remaining four cannot be convicted under S. 395 — Their conviction under S. 392.

When a charge says that the five accused persons committed dacoity and one of them is acquitted, then the conviction of the remaining four persons for dacoity under S. 395 is contrary to law and should be set aside.

Held, that it was unfortunate that the charge was framed only against five persons without mentioning the words "and others". It was better in the administration of criminal justice that the Sessions Judges should frame a charge after reading the committal order and bring their mind to bear upon the charge framed against the accused for which he was called upon to defend himself.

In view of the illegality of the conviction for dacoity, the conviction for dacoity also of the other two persons who had not appealed should be set aside in exercise of revisional powers.

It is necessary to convict the four persons for robbery that they must have caused the theft as also the injury. If these ingredients are not present, a judgment of conviction against the four persons under S. 392, I. P. C. cannot be passed.

The case would be governed under S. 394, I. P. Code, because though the person who caused the injuries is different from the person from whose house the stolen properties are recovered and who can be presumed to be the thief, yet by virtue of Section 394, I. P. C. they can be said to be persons jointly concerned in committing or attempting to commit robbery. ('58) 24 Cut LT 487.

——Ss. 395 and 400 — Sentence.

Offences like dacoity have to be put down sternly by passing deterrent sentences on those found guilty. A sentence of two, three or four years' rigorous imprisonment is grossly inadequate, especially in a gang case under S. 400, I. P. C., which is far more heinous than a case of simple dacoity under S. 395. ILR (1956) Cut 195: 1956 Cr LJ 1208: 22 Cut LT 317: AIR 1958 Orissa 177 (186) (Pt K) (Pr 49) (DB).

The evidence of identification of an accused for the first time in the dock is inherently weak, more specially so, when the identification in Court is about three to four years after the witnesses had seen the miscreants involved in a dacoity, on the night of the dacoity.

No doubt, the substantive evidence is the statement in Court; but the purpose of test identification is to test that evidence and the safe rule is that the sworn testimony of witnesses in Court as to the identity of the accused, who are strangers to the witnesses, generally speaking, requires corroboration, which should be in the form of an earlier identification proceeding. There may be an exception to this rule as where the Court is satisfied that the evidence of a particular witness is such that it can safely rely on it without the precaution of an earlier identification proceeding. AIR 1960 SC 1340, Rel. on.

Where a direct witness has consistently identified the accused both at the test parade and at the trial, his identification may safely be accepted, unless there are other circumstances indicating that the witness has probably made a mistake. But when the identification in Court is not supported by an earlier test, it is unsafe to act on that evidence in the absence of exceptional circumstances, such as adequate descriptive particulars of the accused given early by the witnesses which corroborate the identification. ILR (1962) Andh Pra 96: 1963 (2) Cr LJ 121: AIR 1963 Andh Pra 314 (319, 320) (Pt B) (Prs 12, 13, 14) (DB).

Where certain property stolen in a dacoity is recovered from the houses of the accused at their instance 8 days after dacoity but the Court disbelieved the evidence relating to the identification of the accused as those involved in the commission of the dacoity, it would be meaningless to convict the accused both under Ss. 395 and 412.

For a conviction under Section 412 the mere proof of knowledge or belief that the articles were stolen articles is not sufficient. It must further be proved that the accused had knowledge or belief that the possession of the articles had been transferred by the commission of a dacoity.

4. Procedure.

●——S. 395 — Six accused placed on trial under charge of dacoity — Three belonging to complainant's village and remaining three belonging to adjoining village — All six well known to complainant's party and actively opposed to him — High Court acquitting three accused of complainant's village on ground that evidence against them was tainted but convicting remaining three under S. 395 — Propriety — Retrial — Necessity.

Held, that the High Court erred in making a distinction between the three accused belonging to the complainant's village and the remaining three belonging to the adjoining village. The High Court having come to the conclusion that three out of the six accused were not guilty, should have gone into the question whether there was satisfactory evidence to show that the three remaining accused could be convicted under Section 395, Penal Code on the charges as framed. In any event the three remaining accused could be convicted of the lesser offence of robbery under Section 392, Penal Code, if there was evidence to show that they had committed acts of theft and used violence while committing the theft. In such a situation their individual acts in connection with the alleged occurrence had to be considered. That also had not been done. The evidence led on behalf of the prosecution had not sought to bring home to each individual accused the part played by him. This would also necessitate a retrial. But as the accused had already been in jail for a little less than three years, which period of imprisonment might have been enough as a sentence under Section 392, retrial should not be ordered in the interests of justice. The evidence against the accused not being above serious criticism, they should be acquitted. Ram Shankar Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1956 Cr LJ 822: AIR 1956 SC 441 (445) (Pt A) (Pr 10).

So far as imposing of sentence of death is concerned there is no substantial distinction between Section 302 (murder) and Section 396 (murder while committing dacoity). The obligation in the matter of imposing the sentence is in the same sequence in the two sections, only that in Section 396 the scope of the discretion is larger in so far as there is the possibility of imposing a sentence lesser than death or imprisonment for life for an offence punishable under this section. The duty imposed on Court by former sub-s. (5) of Section 367 to record its reasons for not inflicting a death penalty on a conviction for an offence which was punishable with death is not confined to the awarding of a sentence under Section 502 only, for death is a punishment prescribed and awardable for a conviction under Section 396 also. Whenever a dacoit is proved to have used a gun in the course of the dacoity, whether he actually killed or injured some one or not, he should be awarded a sentence of death. Two of the dacoits fired their guns resulting in death of one villager and gun shot injuries to another.

Held, that as the murder had been committed to facilitate their escape with the booty the murder must be held to have been committed in committing the dacoity within the meaning of Section 396, Penal Code.

Though the decision in 3 Cr LJ 294 (All) was correct on facts the law laid down therein held to be too wide. Case-law Ref.

——S. 396 — Sentence — Death sentence — Judgment in capital cases — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 367 (5).

As in awarding any other sentence, a Judge who passes a sentence of death has to apply his judicial mind. He has to consider the question whether the case is one where a sentence of death should be passed or a lesser sentence. No Judge would pass a sentence of death where it is proper to pass a sentence of transportation for life merely because he has to give reasons for imposing the lesser sentence. As S. 367 (5) makes it necessary for the Judge to give reasons for imposing the lesser sentence, where no such reason is available, a sentence of death has to be passed. It is only to this limited extent that it can be said if at all, that the death sentence is the normal sentence in case of murder, but in that respect an offence of murder does not appear to be materially different from an offence of dacoity with murder. If while committing a dacoity a murder is committed it cannot be said that the gravity of the offence is less than an ordinary murder. 1951 All LJ 567: 52 Cri. LJ 1514: 1951 All WR (HC) 588: 1951 All Cr C 146: AIR 1951 All 834 (836) (Pt C) (Pr 12) (DB).

——S. 396 — Applicability.

Under Section 396, Penal Code, it is not required that the murder should be committed by a certain individual or by one amongst the dacoits to the knowledge of the rest of persons involved in the dacoity. Mere commission of murder in the course of dacoity is enough to involve the provisions of Section 396, Penal Code, against all the persons who were conjointly committing the dacoity.

Where during the commission of a dacoity one of the dacoits started shooting at the owner of the house who was defending himself and thereby caused an injury to him which was likely to cause death or sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and the house owner died subsequently.

Held, that all the persons who had conjointly committed the offence of dacoity were liable under Section 396, Penal Code, and the fact that the death of the injured, might have been averted by skilful medical treatment did not affect the character of the injury and when it was followed by death the causing thereof amounted to murder. 1952 Cr LJ 413: AIR 1953 Assam 45 (46, 47) (Pt B) (Prs 5, 6) (DB).

——S. 396 — Scope and applicability.

Section 396 merely declares the liability of others as co-extensive with that of the actual murder. Dacoity is the joint act of the persons concerned, and the essence of an offence under Section 396 is murder committed in commission of the dacoity. It does not matter whether murder is committed in the immediate presence of a particular person or persons. It is not even necessary, that murder should have been within the previous contemplation of the perpetrators of the crime. AIR 1932 Cal 818 (FB), Foll. 1965 (2) Cr LJ 713: AIR 1965 Cal 598 (612) (Pt H) (Pr 58) (DB).

——S. 396 — Applicability — Essentials to be proved.

Section 396 is enacted to declare the liability of other persons as co-extensive with that of the actual murderer and, for this purpose, all that is required to be proved is that they should have been 'conjointly committing' the dacoity and any death caused by a dacoit in the course of the dacoity would be murder, and attributed to all of them. The death need not be proved against anyone of the dacoits in particular, so long as death is the result of cumulative effect of the violence used by the gang.

The accused are not allowed to plead that they do not know that the death will be the result of the violence used. Individual acts of violence do not require consideration for holding all the accused liable. They would fall for consideration only for fixing the appropriate sentence in respect of each of the accused.

As far as the joint liability of the accused is concerned, the only things to prove are (1) that there was a dacoity; (2) which was the joint act of the persons concerned, and (3) that the murder was committed in the course of the dacoity in question. ILR (1954) Hyd 758: 1955 Cr LJ 953: AIR 1955 Hyd 147 (149) (Pt B) (Pr 8) (DB).

——S. 396 — Construction — 'Murder in so committing dacoity' — Meaning of.

The words used in the section are 'in so committing a dacoity', i.e., the murder should take place during the commission of the dacoity and then alone the accused will be conjointly liable.

Certain police outpost was fired at by accused for four hours during which four police constables were injured and one killed. The attack on the police was not with the object of taking away the guns and rifles but to show how powerful the Communists were. They left unmolested three survivors just for that purpose so that they may relate to all and sundry how they were worsted in the encounter. They even exhorted these survivors to leave their jobs which brought them a salary of Rs. 50 and to join the Communists who were all powerful. Ultimately the accused removed the rifles and tommy guns in the police outpost. They were charged with offence under S. 396.

Held, that the death was committed before the dacoity and not in the commission of a dacoity. The conviction of all the accused under S. 396 was not, therefore, correct. ILR (1954) Hyd 758: 1955 Cr LJ 953: AIR 1955 Hyd 147 (149) (Pt C) (Prs 9, 10) (DB).

——S. 396 — Sentence — Dacoity with murder — Deterrent sentence should be given.

Section 396 provides even death penalty, and it is necessary that the Courts should not hesitate in giving the maximum penalty of death wherein murder or murders are committed in the act of committing dacoity. (1963) ILR 42 Pat 454.

——S. 396 — Applicability — Murder committed by one of dacoits — Whether individual act or part of same transaction — Test for determination.

In determining the question whether the act of murder was an individual act of one of the dacoits and it did not form part of the same transaction of the dacoity, the test is whether the act of murder by one of the dacoits was altogether a separate transaction removed by time and space or it was a part of one and the same transaction of the dacoity itself. If the act of murder is disjointed and bears no connection in point of time and space to the act of dacoity, then alone the act of murder by an individual among the several dacoits will be a separate transaction when the provision of Section 396 will not be attracted; but, if the murder is in continuation of the act of dacoity, surely the section will be attracted:

Where it was clear from the material on record that the deceased had been shot at quite near the scene of the dacoity and that was when the dacoits were leaving the place of dacoity with their booty.

Held, in the circumstances of the case, that the murder was a part of the transaction of dacoity, and, therefore, all the convicts were guilty under Section 396. AIR 1957 SC 320, Disting.; AIR 1932 Cal 878, Rel. on. (1963) ILR 42 Pat 454.

——S. 396 — Applicability.

If a dacoit in the progress of, and in pursuance of, the commission of dacoity, commits a murder, all of his companions, who are participating in the commission of the dacoity, may be convicted under Section 396, although they may have no participation in the murder beyond the fact of participation in dacoity. It is not necessary that murder should have been within the contemplation of all or some of them when the dacoity was planned, nor is it necessary that they should have actually taken part in or abetted its commission. ——S. 397 — Evidence and proof — Accused pointing out sword from field — Inference of participation in dacoity cannot be drawn — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illus. (a)).

The fact that the accused pointed out a sword from the field of A after digging up in a heap of thorns in absence of any suggestion that the sword belonged to any of the prosecution witnesses or that it was lost in the commission of the dacoity, at best would indicate that the accused knew that in the field of A there was a sword lying underneath a heap of thorns, but that evidence cannot lead to an inference that the accused had participated in the commission of the dacoity. 1956 Cr LJ 392: AIR 1956 Bom 186 (188) (Pt D) (Pr 5) (DB).

When the accused were arrested more than a week after the date of a dacoity with injuries upon their persons which were testified by medical evidence to be gun-shot wounds, the fact at best may lead to an inference that they were concerned in some transaction in which they received gun-shot injuries but that does not lead to the inference that they were present in the village where dacoity took place on the particular night and that they received injuries on that night while they were committing the dacoity. 1956 Cr LJ 392: AIR 1956 Bom 186 (188) (Pt E) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 397 — Applicability — Dacoity carrying fire-arm or other deadly weapon.

Great prevalence of dacoity in certain parts — Sentence even under S. 395 has to be severe—Whether or not S. 397 also applies in such a case is little practical consequence as it only prescribes that when there are particular aggravating circumstances, the sentence shall not be less than seven years. 1952 Cri LJ 986: AIR 1952 Vin Pra 42 (49) (Pt N) (Pr 35).

——Ss. 397 and 398 — Distinction.

The mere fact of carrying a fire-arm or other deadly weapon will not attract S. 397. That section does not say 'carries or is armed with" but says "uses any deadly weapon or causes grievous hurt or attempts to cause death or grievous hurt to any person". The distinction between "using" and "to be armed" is a material distinction and has been observed in the wording of the Ss. 397 and 398. The latter section covers attempts only to commit dacoity or robbery when "being armed' is by itself sufficient. But if it is a case of committing robbery or dacoity the weapon has to be used or it should be an overt act, which amounts to attempting to cause death, or grievous hurt, or of actually causing grievous hurt. 1952 Cri LJ 986: AIR 1952 Vind Pra 42 (49) (Pt O) (Pr 35).

——Ss. 399, 402 — Intention to commit dacoity — Proof.

That the purpose of the assembly or of the preparation was the commission of dacoity, is an essential ingredient of an offence under S. 399 or S. 402 to be proved by the prosecution. In rare cases it may be possible to adduce direct evidence of this purpose. Those are cases in which the evidence of an approver or of some reliable person who can depose about what has been said or done by the accused persons is available to show the purpose of their activities.

The Respondents belonged to different places, were not connected with each other but were found together in a room of the Dharmshala and they had with them everything which was ordinarily needed for the purpose of committing dacoity. They had pistols, revolver and gun. They had the requisite number of cartridges. They had a torch and one of them was actually carrying implements which could be used for breaking open locks, doors and safes.

Held, that in the absence of any adequate explanation of the incriminating nature of the circumstances, it could be concluded that the respondents after making necessary preparations had assembled for the purpose of committing dacoity.

No overt act, in addition to preparation, need be proved for showing the purpose. 1960 All WR (HC) 219: 1960 All Cr R 153: 1960 All LJ 277.

——Ss. 399, 395 — Applicability — Overt act by accused — Effect of.

There is no distinction between a dacoity and an attempt to commit one: See S. 391, I. P. Code. Any overt act by the accused for preparation of dacoity would immediately amount to an attempt to commit dacoity, and would immediately make them liable under S. 395, I. P. Code. It would plainly be idle to seek for an overt act for recording a conviction under S. 399, I. P. Code. Section 395 would be the section applicable. 1959 All LJ 519: 1959 All WR (HC) 394: 1959 All Cr R 312: 1959 Cr LJ 1274: AIR 1959 All 727 (730) (Pt B) (Pr 13) (DB).

——Ss. 399 and 402 — Circumstantial evidence.

Held on facts (i) that the object or intention with which the accused were proceeding together towards village P was a fact especially within the knowledge of the accused. Consequently under S. 10€, Evidence Act, the statutory burden was placed on the accused to satisfy the Court as to their object or intention. In the absence of any explanation by them, the Court was entitled to draw appropriate inference from that omission. (ii) The absence of any explanation by the accused or a false explanation by them would itself be an additional piece of circumstantial evidence against them completing the chain establishing the charge: (iii) A defence suggested by the Counsel but not by the accused cannot be accepted by the Court. (iv) The circumstantial evidence was not in any manner consistent with the innocence of the accused and it unambiguously showed that within all human probability they had embarked on an enterprise of dacoity, most likely in village, P. They had prepared themselves for this crime and had assembled for committing it. They were therefore, guilty under both Ss. 399 & 402, I. P. C. 1959 All LJ 519: 1959 All WR (HC) 394: 1959 All Cr R. 312: 1959 Cr LJ 1274: AIR 1959 All 727 (731) (Pt F) (Pr 20) (DB).

——Ss. 399, 402 — Sentences — Youth — Sentence reduced.

——S. 399 — Preparation for committing dacoity.

Under S. 399 one of the essential things that the prosecution must show is that there were persons who had conceived the design of committing dacoity. Once the existence of a such a conspiracy has been established then any step taken with the intention and for the purpose of forwarding that design may justify the Court in holding that there has been preparation within the meaning of that section. The making of preparation should be shown to the satisfaction of the Court by some act such as the collection of men, arms, provisions, etc. which coupled with other circumstances plainly manifest the intention to commit dacoity. 1957 All WR (HC) 529: 1957 All LJ 678.

——Ss. 399 and 402 — Proof — Possession of unlicensed weapons — Sufficiency.

In a trial under Ss. 399 and 402 the only evidence against the accused persons was that they were arrested together by the police and some of them were in possession of unlicenced weapons. The fact that they were proceeding to commit dacoity was proved by the testimony of one P whose story had been rejected by the Sessions Judge. Further, the accused persons were not found in possession of and material required for committing house breaking:

Held, that if P's statement was eliminated there was no evidence to prove that all these persons were going on together with the object of committing dacoity and consequently the mere arrest of these persons together, did not necessarily lead to the inference that they had collected for the purpose of committing dacoity or that they had made preparations to commit dacoity. ——Ss. 399, 402— Accused assembling in a grove at night with unlicensed fire-arms, swords and spears — On information received that they assembled for committing dacoity, police party arriving and surrounding grove — Some of accused opening fire on police — Accused held had assembled for the purpose of committing dacoity and were guilty under S. 402 — In arming themselves with the above weapons they had made preparation for commission of dacoity and were also guilty under S. 399. AIR 1951 All 452 (453) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

——Ss. 399 and 402 — Scope — Presumption of assembly for purposes of committing dacoity.

The natural inference from the fact that the accused were all found assembled in the dark in the night, inside a grove, some furlongs away from the village abadi, and far from their own homes, with two guns and a pistol and a lot of cartridges would be that they had assembled there for the purpose of the commission of a dacoity.

Such a presumption is no doubt a rebuttable one and it is open to such persons to show that they had assembled there for a lawful purpose and thus rebut the presumption. 1951 ALJ 466.

——Ss. 399 and 402 — Relative scope, stated. See Penal Code (1860), S. 402. 1958 Cri LJ 25: AIR 1958 Cal 25 (DB).

——Ss. 399, 395, 396, 397, 398 and 402 — Ingredients of offence — Intention of four others or their taking part, whether necessary.

The presence of at least five persons taking part in robbery is an essential ingredient of dacoity, and indeed, is the one ingredient which distinguishes it from simple robbery. It is clear that in Ss. 395 and 396, I. P. C., and in offences under Ss. 397 and 398, where the charge is that the accused has actually taken part in a dacoity, this ingredient of at least four other persons having the common intention must be present before there can be a conviction. In S. 402, which makes punishable the act of assembling for the purpose of a dacoity, the section itself makes it clear that the above ingredient must be present. What is punishable under S. 399 is the making of any preparation for the committing of any dacoity.

Chakravartti, C. J.:— In order to establish a charge under S. 399, some act amounting to preparation must be proved and what must be proved further is that the act, for which the preparation was being made, was a dacoity, that is to say, robbery to be committed with five or more persons. For the latter, the test is the intention of the accused himself and his intention alone and if his intention to commit dacoity along with four or more other persons is proved, it is not necessary to prove that at least four other persons, sharing his intention and associated with him in the project, actually existed. Still less is necessary to prove, where four or more other persons were externally at least associated with the accused in the preparation, that they did in fact shared his intention. His belief in their intention and his own intention to commit a dacoity along with them is sufficient. 61 Cal WN 856: 1958 Cr LJ 25: ILR (1958) 1 Cal 447: AIR 1958 Cal 25 (28, 31) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 6, 36) (DB).

——Ss. 399 and 402 — Applicability — Assemblage and preparation to commit dacoity — Distinction.

The persons assembled may make preparation for committing a dacoity. After making preparation a dacoity may be attempted and finally a dacoity be committed. The law has assigned different gravities to these different acts and had made such acts differently punishable. After assembling for the purpose of committing a dacoity and proceeding to a certain distance on their way to the destination, it is possible that the idea be abandoned or the process be intercepted. When once the destination is reached or almost reached preparation becomes complete and till then, there would be a mere assemblage:

Held, on facts of the case, that the conviction under S. 399 was wrong and the accused were liable to be convicted for the offence punishable under S. 402, Penal Code. AIR 1918 All 361; AIR 1943 Pat 82; AIR 1943 Sind 212, Distinguished. 1954 Cr LJ 366: AIR 1954 Kutch 1 (2) (Pr 6).

——S. 399 — Proof of intention.

In a case under S. 399 it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the intention of the accused was to commit dacoity in the house of a particular person of a particular village. The legal requirements would be satisfied if it is proved that the assemblage or preparation was made for the purpose of committing dacoity, irrespective of the place where it was to be committed. 1960 BLJR 511: 1960 Cri LJ 1650: AIR 1960 Pat 582 (585) (Pt E) (Pr 23).

——Ss. 399 and 402 — Preparation for dacoity and assembling for dacoity — Distinction.

There is manifestly a distinction between the offences under S. 399 and S. 402. The offence under S. 402 is complete as soon as five or more persons assemble together for the purpose of committing a dacoity. Preparation for committing a dacoity may take place before or after the dacoits assemble together. There is a distinction between preparation for a dacoity and assembling for purpose of committing dacoity. Preparation consists in devising or arranging means necessary for the commission of an offence, an attempt is the direct movement towards the commission after preparations are made. AIR 1943 Pat 82, Rel. on.

Where the persons assemble at a particular spot for committing dacoity, they are guilty under Section 402. Facts that they had come from several miles away from their homes, armed with weapons of defence and attack and had assembled at an hour usual for committing dacoity, are enough to establish that they had made preparations to commit a dacoity. If they had actually arrived at the house where they intended to commit the dacoity, they would have been liable for actually committing dacoity even if their act did not go beyond an attempt to commit that offence. AIR 1916 Lah 334, Rel. on. 1960 BLJR 511: 1960 Cri LJ 1650: AIR 1960 Pat 582 (586) (Pt G) (Pr 25).

——Ss. 399 and 402 — Scope and applicability considered — Evidence and proof — Case on facts. AIR 1955 NUC (Pat) 4903.

——S. 399 — Applicability — Actual injury not necessary.

Section 399 makes any preparation for committing dacoity an offence and it is not necessary for actual injury to be caused in order to attract the provisions of that section. 62 Punj LR 156: 1960 Cr LJ 1234: AIR 1960 Punj 482 (483) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

——Ss. 399 and 402 — Scope and distinction.

Though the offence under S. 402 and the one under S. 399 would probably involve similar ingredients, the difference between the two is that while under S. 402 mere assembly without other preparation is enough, S. 399 is attracted when some additional step is taken in the course of preparation. 1960 Cr LJ 1234: 62 Punj LR 156: AIR 1960 Punj 482 (483) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

——S. 399 — Requirements of.

To bring the case within S. 399 it is not necessary that persons shown to be making the preparations should be five or more in number. It is, however, necessary for the prosecution to prove that the raid for which the persons prosecuted were making preparation was to be committed by five or more persons, for otherwise it would not be dacoity but merely robbery, and mere preparation for committing robbery, unless it ends in an actual attempt is not punishable by law. Section 399 contemplates that there is a general design to commit dacoity, or to engage in an expedition for that purpose, though the plans of the dacoits are not matured. Thus the Court has to satisfy itself that the accused had decided upon committing dacoity and it was for committing dacoity that they were making preparation. 1952 Cri LJ 1119: AIR 1952 Punj 249 (250) (Pt A) (Prs 13, 14).

——S. 400 — Single charge under S. 400, I. P. Code framed against accused involved in several dacoities — Prosecution case about conspiracy between accused failing — Legality of joint trial for different dacoities not affected — Section 237 Cr. P. C. is applicable in absence of prejudice. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 237. 1963 (2) Cri LJ 121: AIR 1963 Andh Pra 314 (DB).

——S. 400 — Object of — 'Belongs' — Meaning of — Intimate connection with body of persons extending for sufficient period to warrant inference of identification with band committing dacoities is required — Previous conviction for similar offences are relevant, under Explanation 2 to Section 14, Evidence Act, to prove sharing in common purpose of gang.

The offence under S. 400 is entirely a creation of a statute and is intended to break up gangs mentioned therein, by punishing also their associates, who share their purpose. Section 400 appears to postulate the existence of a definite gang operating for a definite period and the object of the section would seem to be to provide for the punishment of those proved to be members of such a gang and against whom evidence is not forthcoming to convict them of specific offences of dacoity. ILR 32 Mad 179. Rel. on.

But the word 'belong' in S. 400, implies something more than the idea of casual association; it involves the notion of continuity and indicates a more or less intimate connection with a body of persons extending over a period sufficiently long to warrant the inference that the person affected has identified himself with a band, the common purpose of which is the habitual commission of decoity. AIR 1930 Oudh 455, Rel. on.

In order to prove that the person charged shared the purpose of the gang, previous convictions for and previous commissions of similar offences are relevant under Explanation 2 to S. 140, Evidence Act. 1 Cal WN 146. Rel. on. The previous offences must, however, be of a cognate character so as to reasonably permit an inference as to the state of mind of the person charged. It is doubtful whether evidence to show that the accused had committed crimes other than dacoities would be relevant to the charge. Such evidence is really evidence of bad character and is excluded by S. 54 of Evidence Act, as bad character of the accused is not a fact in issue. ILR 32 Mad 179, Rel. on. ILR (1962) Andh Pra 96: 1963 (2) Cr LJ 121: AIR 1963 Andh Pra 314 (322) (Pt E) (Pr 41) (DB).

——S. 400 — Identity of gang concerned in dacoities must be established.

Although the commission of a number of dacoities, within short space of 15 months, in which one or more of the accused charged under Section 400 are proved to have been concerned, may indicate that they were perpetuated by their gang, that does not mean that the identity of the gang concerned in the dacoities in question need not be established.

When admittedly there had been other gangs which operated in Hyderabad, a short period earlier than the dacoities with which the accused are charged and the possibility of several persons who were charged with having been members of those gangs, having relapsed into crime as the result of their acquittal cannot be ruled out, it cannot be said that only the gang, constituted by the accused under trial could have committed the dacoities with which they are charged.

So also, the modus operandi of the accused in using sten-guns and khaki dress at the time of the commission of the dacoities, does not stamp all the dacoities as the work of the same gang, when admittedly, illicit sten-guns and other firearms were easily available in the city of Hyderabad on account of events which took place shortly before the Police action and there had been several other parties of dacoits who had also used such weapons and khaki dress. ILR (1962) Andh Pra 96: 1963 (2) Cr LJ 121: AIR 1963 Andh Pra 314 (323) (Pt F) (Pr 44) (DB).

——S. 400 — Victims of different dacoities making rival claims to particular article — Their identification of article not reliable — Presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act, cannot be raised.

Proof that an article which is traced to the possession of an accused was stolen is a condition precedent for any presumption under S. 114. When the victims of different dacoities make rival claims to a particular article, no reliance can be placed on their identification and there is also no scope for raising the presumption under S. 114. ILR (1962) Andh Pra 96: 1963 (2) Cr LJ 121: AIR 1963 Andh Pra 314 (321) (Pt J) (Pr 29) (DB).

——S. 400 — "Gang" — Meaning — Two or more persons can constitute gang — Proof of participation in more than two dacoities, within comparatively short space of time is necessary to prove existence of gang.

The word 'gang' means any band or company of persons who go about together or act in concert.

The essence of the word 'gang' in S. 400 is that the persons should act in concert and therefore, two or more persons can constitute a gang. Their purpose of habitually committing dacoity may be proved by their declaration or by their conduct. Where the relevant evidence consists in the conduct of the accused in having participated in different dacoities and there is no other evidence to prove the criminal purpose, participation in more than two dacoities within comparatively a short space of time is necessary to prove the existence of a gang.

Even if it is assumed that more than two persons are necessary to constitute a gang, when the accused proved to have participated in three dacoities within a space of one year, happen to be residents of Hyderabad and have committed the crimes in distant villages along with a number of unidentifiable persons, it can be reasonably inferred that there were more members of the gang who happen to have been not identified. ILR (1962) Andh Pra 96: AIR 1963 Andh Pra 314 (322) (Pt D) (Prs 40, 42) (DB).

——S. 400 — Essentials of offence.

One of the chief points to be established in a case of gang dacoity is association in the crime and if it can be proved that the accused and other persons had joined together to commit dacoities, the former fact would be strong evidence of criminal association and would be relevant to show that they are members of the gang. If a gang of persons can be shown to have been associated for the habitual commission of dacoities, evidence as to other crime committed by the gang may very well be relevant against the accused. A conviction under S. 400 cannot be considered bad in law merely because the evidence on record would also justify conviction of a special offence under S. 395, I. P. C. 1959 Cr LJ 947: AIR 1959 Andh Pra 387 (388) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 400 — Sentence — Dacoity — Sentence of two, three or four years' rigorous imprison. ment is grossly inadequate, especially in a gang case under S. 400, which is far more heinous than a case of simple dacoity under S. 395. See Penal Code (1860), S. 395. 1956 Cri LJ 1208: AIR 1956 Orissa 177 (DB).

——S. 400 — "Belong to a gang" — Meaning.

The expression "belong" in S. 400, I. P. C., implies something more than casual association for the purpose of committing one or two dacoities by a person who was ordinarily living by honest means. It refers to those persons who habitually associate with a gang of dacoits and actively assist them in their operations. But evidence showing the actual participation by an accused in any given theft or robbery is evidence both of his association with the gang and of his object in such association. Doubtless it is only a piece of evidence and may not by itself suffice to show that he belongs to the gang. But if a person with a bad past record participates in the commission of dacoity even on one occasion in association with a well-known gang of habitual dacoits knowing them to be such a gang it may be reasonably inferred that he belongs to that gang unless there is some other material on record to justify an inference that the association was of a casual nature.

Again a person may belong to a gang of dacoits without having actually participated in the commission of even one dacoity. A clever member of the gang may always remain in the background while organising the operations of the gang, giving them active assistance for the purpose of meeting together, furnishing them with weapons and also screening them after the commission of the offence and helping them in the disposal of the looted property. It is true that a mere receiver of stolen property or mere harbourer of a gang of dacoits cannot be said to belong to such a gang. But a habitual harbourer of a gang of dacoits knowing them to be habitually committing dacoity may in some circumstances be held to belong to that gang. The question ultimately depends on whether from all the proved facts and circumstances it may be reasonably held that he identified himself so much the object of the gang and facilitated them in the commission of the offences as to become a member of the gang. For this purpose his intimate association with the gang before the commission of dacoities, his subsequent association with them after the commission of the offence, the facilities given by him in disposing of the looted property and in screening the dacoits would all be relevant pieces of evidence along with other evidence of his past activites. ILR (1956) Cut 195: 22 Cut LT 317: 1956 Cr LJ 1208: AIR 1956 Orissa 177 (180, 181) (Pt B) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

——S. 400 — 'Habit' — Evidence of previous conviction — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 54).

In a trial for an offence under S. 400, I. P. C., evidence of previous conviction may be admissible for the purpose of proving habit and association. It is indeed difficult to dissociate habit from character. For proving a charge under Section 400, I. P. C., it must be established (1) that there was a gang associated for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity and (2) that the accused "belonged' to the gang, that is to say, the association of the accused with the gang was not casual but was intended to be habitual. Hence, 'habit' is a fact in issue to be proved for the purpose of establishing both the aforesaid ingredients of the offence. As habit is equivalent to character, it may be reasonably said that character of an accused is itself a fact in issue for proving a charge under S. 400, I. P. C. Thus Explanations 1 & 2 to S. 54 of the Evidence Act, are attracted and previous convictions not only in respect of dacoities but also in respect of other offences such as theft, burglary and orders under S. 109 or S. 110, Criminal P. C., may be admissible. Apart from the evidence of habit and character, these previous convictions may also be admissible for the purpose of proving association of a group of individuals. ILR (1956) Cut 195: 1956 Cr LJ 1208: 22 Cut LT 317: AIR 1956 Orissa 177 (182) (Pt C) (Pr 10) (DB).

——S. 400 — Gang engaged in habitually committing dacoity.

When people of bad antecedents are proved to have been kept in jail for several months and when subsequent to their release they are proved to have participated jointly in several dacoities it will be reasonable to infer that they operated as a gang engaged in habitually committing dacoity. 22 Cut LT 317: ILR (1956) Cut 195: 1956 Cr LJ 1208: AIR 1956 Orissa 177 (183) (Pt G) (Pr 13) (DB).

A person who was actively helping a gang in its nefarious activities by keeping one of its leaders, as a guest in his house for several days and thereby facilitating the planning of several dacoities with the help of other leading members of the gang and also helping them financially and otherwise whenever they were involved in cases, cannot be held to be a mere harbourer or receiver of stolen property. ILR (1956) Cut 195: 1956 Cr LJ 1208: 22 Cut LT 317: AIR 1956 Orissa 177 (185) (Pt I) (Prs 25, 46) (DB).

——S. 400 — Criminal P. C. See Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 179. 1961 (1) Cri LJ 841: AIR 1961 Pat 260 (DB).

——S. 400 — Association for habitually committing dacoities — Proof.

In a trial for an offence under S. 400, the correct principles to be followed is to look to the evidence of association and that must be held to be independent of whether an accused has been previously convicted or has been acquitted. It is the evidence of association that is really material and not participation in any particular dacoity, and for the purpose of proving association the evidence which has been found to be insufficient for a specific charge of dacoity may yet be relevant for establishing association of the members of the gang for the purpose of committing dacoities.

Not only evidence of previous convictions on the charge of dacoities but also in respect of other offences such as theft, burglary and orders under S. 109 or 110, Cr. P. Code, may be admissible. To establish the charge of belonging to a gang for habitually committing dacoities, the evidence of association based on other offences would be relevant to show that the gang also operated for the purpose of committing dacoities frequently and habitually. AIR 1930 Oudh 455 and AIR 1925 Oudh 374 (2) and AIR 1956 Orissa 177 and Cr App No. 218 of 1951, dated 4-4-1954 (Cal), Rel. on; ILR 38 Cal 559 (SB) and AIR 1929 Oudh 321 (2) and AIR 1928 Oudh 430, Disting. It is not essential that participation of each one of individual members must be established in at least three, or five dacoities. Nor is the applicability of S. 400 excluded because some outsiders as informers or helpers also have joined the gang in a particular enterprise. AIR 1925 Oudh 374 (2) and AIR 1956 Orissa 177, Rel on. Membership of the gang, in regard to an individual accused person will depend upon the facts and circumstances of a case and not upon any arithmetical calculation with regard to the number of dacoities in which an accused may be found to have taken part along with the other members of the gang. ILR 38 Pat 1251: 1961 (1) Cr LJ 841: AIR 1961 Pat 260 (265, 266, 267) (Pt C) (Prs 16, 17, 61) (DB).

——S. 400 — Sentence — Considerations — Accused found guilty of habitually committing dacoities as members of gang, in villages — Offence under S. 400, being in its very nature more serious than charge of committing dacoity, deserved to be awarded more severe sentence than for dacoity, so as to operate as deterrent to commission of such offence — Sentence of 10 years R. I. for life which was maximum penalty prescribed under S. 400. ILR 38 Pat 1251: 1961 (1) Cr LJ 841: AIR 1961 Pat 260 (268) (Pt D) (Pr 76) (DB).

——S. 401 — Evidence Act (1872), S. 54 — Offence under S. 401, Penal Code — Evidence of general bad repute — Evidence of previous convictions — When admissible. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 54. 1960 Cri LJ 1204: AIR 1960 Guj 5 (DB).

——S. 401 — Applicability — Evidence and proof. Before S. 401 can apply the prosecution has to prove that the accused person charged under S. 401 belongs to a gang of persons and that the gang of persons is associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery. The word 'belong' implies something more than casual association; it involves the notion of continuity and the proof of a more or less intimate connection with a body of persons extending over a period of time sufficiently long to warrant the inference that the person affected had identified himself with the gang the common purpose of which was the habitual commission of either theft or robbery. It would not be sufficient for the prosecution merely to rely upon the fact that an accused person had associated himself with the gang in the commission of only one offence. The purpose for which the members of the gang were associated is usually not a matter of direct proof by direct evidence and is generally a matter of inference from the facts and circumstances proved and acts done by the accused. It is also not necessary that the members of the gang should be members right from the beginning. The evidence of the prosecution that a person was associated with the gang for the purpose of committing other offences would not be sufficient under S. 401. 1960 Cr LJ 1204: (1960) 1 Guj HCR 28: (1960) 1 Guj LR 34: AIR 1960 Guj 5 (6) (Pt A) (Pr 1) (DB).

——Ss. 402, 399 — Applicability — Some of accused not armed with deadly weapons or doing any overt act amounting to preparation, if guilty under S. 399.

Mere assemblage for the purpose of commission of dacoity being distinct offence punishable under Section 402, the mere act of assembling is not to be deemed to be a preparation for commission of dacoity punishable under S. 399.

Where some of the accused assembled for the purpose of committing dacoity had made preparation to commit it by arming themselves with unlicensed firearms, swords, etc., while the others were not so armed and had come to the assembly on the direction of others and not in pursuance of any previous agreement among themselves and there was no evidence to show that they had done any other overt act amounting to preparation:

——S. 402 — Purpose of assembly — Proof of — Purpose can be gathered only from circumstances — Police on information going to a grove — Number of persons assembling after dark — Four of them arrested — Articles usually found with dacoits recovered from them — Held, purpose was to commit dacoity.

On receiving information that certain persons were going to assemble for purpose of committing a dacoity, a police party went to a grove. When darkness set in number of persons came to the grove armed with a gun. Four of them were caught and articles recovered from them were a gun, some gun shots and gun-powder, a dagger, a chisel, electric torch and sticks. They were tried and convicted under Section 402, Penal Code. In appeal it was contended that there was no proof that they had assembled for purpose of committing a dacoity.

Held, that the purpose of the assembly can be gathered only from the circumstances. It is difficult to give any direct evidence of such purpose. Having regard to the circumstances which led the police party to come to the grove and in view of the articles recovered from the possession of the appellants there was hardly any room for doubt that the purpose of the assembly was to commit dacoity, as the articles usually recovered from dacoits were found in the possession of the appellants. 1949 All WR (HC) 471: 1949 All Cri Cas 116: 51 Cri LJ 399: AIR 1950 All 93 (93) (Pr 6).

——S. 402 — Intention — Proof.

The intention or agreement to commit dacoity must be proved before the members of the assembly can be punished under Section 402. It is difficult to prove the agreement by direct evidence. ——Ss. 402 and 399 — Relative scope.

Chakravartti, C. J. — Section 402 contemplates a stage when the whole project still lies in the realm of design and intention without any attempt having yet been made to give it a concrete shape. But the project advances a step further when someone of them does some act amounting to preparation even if it be by himself. In certain circumstances, assembly itself may amount to preparation, for example, when five or more persons, after having planned a dacoity and after having collected the necessary arms and implements, agree to assemble at a forsaken temple in a jungle in order to proceed therefrom to place of the raid and in pursuance of that agreement do in fact assemble there. The assembly in such a case would not be an assembly as contemplated by Section 402, but would be an act of preparation. If so, if the persons assembled were to be prosecuted, the prosecution would not require Section 402 at all, but might charge them and charge successfully under Section 399, if not under any other section. 61 Cal WN 856: 1958 Cr LJ 25: ILR (1958) 1 Cal 447: AIR 1958 Cal 25 (31) (Pt D) (Pr 37) (DB).

——S. 402 — Ingredients of offence under — Distinction between preparation for dacoity and assembling for committing dacoity.

The offence under Section 402 is complete as soon as five or more persons assembled together for the purpose of committing a dacoity. Preparation for committing a dacoity may take place before or after the dacoits assembled together. There is distinction between preparation for a dacoity and assembling for the purpose of committing dacoity. Preparation consists in devising or arranging means necessary for the commission of an offence, an attempt is the direct movement towards the commission after preparations are made. Where the persons assemble at a particular spot for committing dacoity they are guilty under Section 402. The fact, that they had come armed with weapons of defence and attack and had assembled at an usual hour (night) for committing dacoity is enough to establish that they had made preparation to commit a dacoity. If they arrive at the house where they intended to commit dacoity, they would be liable for actually committing dacoity even if their act did not go beyond an attempt to commit that offence. 28 Cut LT 571.

——S. 403 — Accused having dishonest intention at time of taking possession — Offence.

It cannot be said that criminal misappropriation cannot be committed if the accused had a dishonest intention at the time of taking possession of the article. If the prosecution proves a case of Section 403, I. P. C., the accused by proving that he had a dishonest intention at the time of taking delivery of the article cannot change the nature of the offence to that of cheating. 1960 Cr LJ 857: AIR 1960 All 387 (394) (Pt J) (Pr 21).

——Ss. 403, 411 — Essentials of offence — Property in custody of railway found in godown of accused — Applicability.

There are two things necessary before an offence under Section 403, Indian Penal Code can be established. Firstly, that the property must be misappropriated or converted to the use of the accused, and, secondly, that he must misappropriate or convert it dishonestly.

Certain bales of cloth which were in the custody of railway were found to be unloaded near the godown of the accused and were later on recovered from that godown. The accused was tried for an offence under Section 411, I. P. Code, on the specific allegation that the bales were stolen from the railway but the theft of property could not be established and hence the Court convicted the accused under Section 403, I. P. Code, instead of Section 411, I. P. Code.

Held, that the mere fact that the property was once in the custody of the Railway and was subsequently found in the godown of the accused did not make out a case under S. 403 against the accused. There being no proof of misappropriation or conversion of property or any evidence of dishonest intention, there could be no conviction under Section 403, I. P. Code. 1961 All WR (Sup) 91: (1960) 1 Assam LR 224: 1961 (2) Cr LJ 457: 1961 All Cri R 405: AIR 1961 Assam 132 (132) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 403 — Bare intention to misappropriate is not enough.

The conviction of an accused under S. 403, without a finding that he had misappropriated or converted the properties in question to his own use, on the ground that he had the intention of doing so is bad in law. Where certain missing properties were traced to the accused but there was no proof of their having been stolen and so the accused was acquitted of a charge under Section 411, I. P. ——S. 403 — Applicability.

A who had mortgaged certain lands to B had entered into an agreement with B under which the compensation money which A was to get in respect of mortgaged lands acquired under the Land Acquisition Act was to be first applied towards satisfaction of the mortgage loan. On receipt of the money A refused to pay it to B and kept the money for himself. On a complaint by B the magistrate issued summons to A under S. 403, Penal Code:

Held, that the compensation money could not in law become the money of B. The case was one of breach of contract. The refusal to pay every civil debt does not justify the finding of dishonesty. It could not be said that A had committed an offence under Section 403, Penal Code. The proceedings must therefore be quashed as no offence was disclosed. 58 Cal WN 552: 1954 Cr LJ 1566: AIR 1954 Cal 547 (Prs 2, 3, 4) (DB).

2. Criminal misappropriation, breach of trust and theft — Distinction.

——Ss. 403 and 405 — Breach of trust —Essential element — 'Entrustment' — Meaning of — Distinction between breach of trust and criminal misappropriation.

Entrustment is an essential element of the offence defined in Section 405. The word 'entrust' is not a term of art. In common parlance it embraces all cases in which a thing is handed over by one person to another for specific purpose. Entrustment need not be express, it may be implied. The essence of the offence of criminal misappropriation is that the property of another person comes into the possession of the accused in some neutral manner and is misappropriated or converted to his own use by the accused. No entrustment is required for this offence to be constituted. 1964 MPLJ 750: 1964 Jab LJ 724.

——Ss. 403, 405, 378 — Criminal misappropriation and theft — Distinction.

In case of theft mere removal from the possession of a person with dishonest intention is enough, while in the case of criminal misappropriation there must further be misappropriation or conversion. 1953 Cri LJ 842: AIR 1953 Pat 100 (103) (Pt E) (Pr 11).

3. "Misappropriates or converts to his own use".

——Ss. 403, 405 and 40 — Dishonest misappropriation — Mens rea and not actual amount misappropriated is important.

In a criminal trial what is important is the mens rea. It is not that the actual amount alleged to have been misappropriated may be more or less but if there is dishonest misappropriation of any amount the person so misappropriating would nevertheless be guilty of criminal breach of trust. 1965 All LJ 538: ILR (1965) 2 All 82.

——S. 403 — Criminal misappropriation — Bhagdar misappropriating landlord's share of paddy is an offence under Penal Code —Tenancy Laws — West Bengal Bargadars Act (2 of 1950) does not bar prosecution for offences under Penal Code.

The relations between the owners and the Bhagdars envisaged in the West Bengal Bargadars Act are normal relations where no element of dishonesty enters. There may be differences and disputes as between owners and bargadars requiring adjudication; and it is such disputes and differences of a civil nature for which the legislature has provided a forum mentioned in the Act for solution. But where criminal acts involving dishonesty are charged and evidence is led in support of them the mere fact that the person charged fills a particular character will not oust the jurisdiction of the criminal courts to punish the offender. The Bargadars Act can never be put forward as a plea in bar or a shield against prosecution for offences under the Penal Code. Where, therefore, the evidence is clear that there has been dishonest appropriation of property, the status of the person charged cannot be availed of to prevent application of the ordinary law of the land creating offences and regulating punishment of crimes. ILR (1957) 1 Cal 506.

See Prevention of Corruption Act (1947), S. 5 (2). 1959 Cr LJ 973: AIR 1959 Him Pra 14.

——Ss. 403, 409 — Applicability — Mere retention of money — Offence — (Words and Phrases).

To establish an offence under Section 409, I. P. Code, the prosecution must prove that the accused misappropriated or converted the amount in question to his own use and that too dishonestly. To 'misappropriate' means 'improperly setting apart for one's use to the exclusion of the owner'. 'Converts' means appropriation and dealing with property of another without right as it is his own property.

Dishonesty may be proved by evidence or may be presumed from the circumstances but under no circumstances can it be assumed as a matter of course. Where it is not clear from the evidence what the accused did with the money during the period he was in possession of it, the Court cannot assume, in absence of any evidence to show or circumstances to infer, that he misappropriated the amount dishonestly.

Mere retention of money is not itself sufficient to conclude that the accused was guilty of criminal breach of trust. 1956 Cr LJ 630: ILR (1956) Mys 10: AIR 1956 Mys 40 (41) (Pt B) (Prs 4, 5).

4. Explanation 1.

——S. 403, Expl. 1 — Misappropriation for time only — Proof of.

Section 403, Expln. 1 clearly states that a dishonest misappropriation for time only is misappropriation within the meaning of this section. The essential thing to be proved in such cases is whether the accused was actuated by dishonest intention or not and which dishonesty has to be inferred from false accounting, absence of bona fides or reasonable explanation for non-accounting. 1956 Cr LJ 1079: 1953 Mad WN 929: AIR 1956 Mad 452 (453) (Pt B) (Pr 9).

5. Explanation 2.

——S. 403 — Finder of article or animal when can be held guilty under S. 403.

Per Gurtu and Sankar Saran JJ. — When a stray animal is found and is taken into possession by the finder thereof, he may, in the first instance, do it with no criminal intent. Thereafter, if he changes his intention with regard to the animal and converts the animal to his own use, he then commits an offence under S. 403, I. P. C. A finder of an article should take some steps in order to ascertain who the true owner is. If, after he has taken such steps, the true owner is not discovered, then, under certain circumstances, the finder may retain the article and in such a case he would not be held guilty of criminal misappropriation, but if he acts with reference to the article found in such a way that the true owner may never discover that it had been picked up by him, then undoubtedly he is attempting to create a situation where conversion of the goods to his own use would be easy. In such a case naturally the conduct of the finder is criminal conduct and he would come within the ambit of Section 403 of the Indian Penal Code. 1952 Cri LJ 904: AIR 1952 All 481 (484) (Pt D) (Pr 16).

6. Partner.

——S. 403 — Dishonest misappropriation of property — Partner using partnership asset for his own use — Not liable under S. 403, I. P. C.

An owner of property, in whichever way he uses his property and with whatever intention, will not be liable for misappropriation and that would be so even if he is not the exclusive owner thereof. A partner has undefined ownership along with the other partners over all the assets of the partnership. If he chooses to use any of them for his own purposes he may be accountable civilly to the other partners. But he does not thereby commit any misappropriation. Velji Raghavji Patel v. 7. Evidence and proof.

●——S. 403 — Burden of proof— Criminal misappropriation — What prosecution has to prove. In order to prove an offence under Section 403, Indian Penal Code, the prosecution has to prove that the property, in this case, the net amount of ninety-six thousand odd rupees collected by the accused by way of entry fees in the competition was the property of the complainants and (2) that the accused misappropriated that sum or converted it to his own use, and (3) that he did so dishonestly.

——S. 403 — Misappropriation proof — Servant bound to account for goods entrusted to him, failing to do so — He is prima facie guilty — Burden of proving circumstances exonerating him is on him — Giving of false explanation, and making himself scarce relevant.

Ordinarily, if a person receives money which he is bound to account for and does not do so, he is prima facie guilty of the offence of misappropriation. Where money is entrusted for a particular purpose, the owner cannot know that it has been misappropriated until the person to whom it has been entrusted fails to account for it. In the case of a servant charged with misappropriating the goods of his master, the elements of criminal offence of misappropriation will be established if the prosecution proves that the servant received the goods, that he was under a duty to account to his master and had not done so. It is not necessary for the prosecution to eliminate all possible defences or circumstances which may exonerate the accused. If these facts are within the knowledge of the accused then he has to prove them. The giving of a false explanation is an element which the court can take into consideration. AIR 1959 SC 1390; AIR 1960 SC 889, Rel. on.

Subsequent conduct of the accused and the fact of his making himself scarce are circumstances which are relevant and which can be taken into consideration in finding whether the accused had a guilty mind. (1836) 7 C and P 338; (1854) 6 Cox CC 445, Ref. 1962 Ker LT 679: (1962) 2 Ker LR 256.

——S. 404 — "Property" — Meaning — Does not mean immovable property.

The object behind S. 404 is to afford protection of property which by reason if its being peculiarly placed needs protection where the person who could look after it is dead and the person who is expected and entitled to look after it after the death of the aforesaid person has not appeared on the scene. There is a change available to strangers to dishonestly misappropriate and convert the same. Under these circumstances if such strangers are allowed to do so, the subsequent owner may lose that property entirely. In majority of cases there is no evidence as to what the property was and there is hardly any possibility of following the property which has passed into several hands or changed its form. All these possible risks ought to be checked. It is for this reason that a provision is made by which dishonest misappropriation or conversion under these circumstances is made specially punishable with a higher sentence.

In view of this position of immovable property it is difficult to say that properly where the subsequent owner has not stepped in, is open to any risk or needs any protection. The Legislature could not have intended to protect that property which is otherwise safe and evidence pertaining to which cannot be lost. The provision for prescribing punishment with respect to such property will be unnecessary and uncalled for. 23 Cal 372; 6 Bom HCR (Cr) 33, Rel. on; AIR 1925 All 673, Dissent from. 1956 Cr LJ 224: Madh BLJ 1955 HCR 1693: Madh BLR 1955 (Cr) 328: AIR 1956 Madh Bha 49 (50) (Pt A) (Prs 9, 10).

——S. 404 — Essential ingredients — Mens rea.

Held, that the essential ingredient of offence under S. 404, was the knowledge on the part of the accused that the property in question was in possession of the deceased person at the time of that person's decease and had not since been in the possession of any person legally entitled to such possession. So the prosecution had further to establish that knowledge on the part of the accused. Indirect evidence of circumstantial nature enabling interference of that knowledge could possibly be given without establishing that the prosecution would not be entitled to claim conviction of the accused person under S. 404, on mere recovery from him of the ornaments belonging to the deceased person and last worn by him. There being no evidence on record pointing out to such a knowledge on the part of the accused, conviction of the accused could not be sustained under S. 404. 1961 MPLJ (Notes) 130.

●——S. 405 — Criminal P. C. (1898), Sections 182 and 181 (2) — Criminal breach of trust — Uncertainty as to place where offence committed —Applicability of Section 182, Criminal P. ●——S. 405 — Applicability — Essentials to be proved.

To constitute an offence of criminal breach of trust it is essential that the prosecution must prove first of all that the accused was entrusted with some property or with any dominion or power over it. It has to be established further that in respect of the property so entrusted, there was dishonest misappropriation or dishonest conversion or dishonest use or disposal in violation of a direction of law or legal contract, by the accused himself or by someone else which he willingly suffered to do. It follows almost axiomatically from the definition that the ownership or beneficial interest in the property in respect of which criminal breach of trust is alleged to have been committed, must be in some person other than the accused and the latter must hold it on account of some person or in some way for his benefit.

The accused, a receiver of a Cotton Mill appointed by the High Court, in the exercise of discretion conferred on him by the High Court, demanded and received payment over and above the market price in respect of bales allotted to a shopkeeper. The accused, however, failed to account for this extra payment. He was charged for and held guilty of criminal breach of trust in appropriating the extra money without bringing it into the mill's accounts. The question was whether the extra money was given by the shopkeeper to the accused for and on behalf of the Mill or was given to him personally as a motive or reward for showing some favour.

Held, (1) (on appreciation of evidence) that the money was intended to be paid to the accused as his own personal profit and it was not an item of additional or extra price for the goods purchased which was demanded by or paid to the accused on behalf of the mills. AIR 1952 Trav-Co 128, Reversed.

(2) As the sum was paid by way of illegal gratification, there could be no question of entrustment in such payment. The criminality of the act consisted in illegal receipt of the money and the question of subsequent misappropriation or conversion of the same did not arise at all. Ithiravi Nambudiri v. State of Trav-Co., 1953 Ker LT 173: ILR (1953) Trav-Co 181: 1954 Cri LJ 102: AIR 1953 SC 478 (484) (Pt C) (Pr 21).

——S. 405 — Construction and scope — Ingredients of offence.

The proposition that Section 405, I. P. Code, consists of two parts, one a positive part, which deals with what is known as criminal misappropriation or conversion of the property and the other a negative part which consists of dishonestly using or disposing of the property in violation of any contract touching the discharge of trust cannot be accepted as correct. Both the parts positive in their nature. In the first case the positive part consists of criminal misappropriation and the conversion of the property and in the second case the positive act consists in dishonestly using or disposing of the property in violation of any direction of law or prescribed mode of trust or legal contract. The using or disposing of, are definitely acts and not omissions. Even in the second instance unless the property is disposed of or used the offence would not be committed. 1956 Cri LJ 1165: AIR 1956 All 619 (626) (Pt D) (Pr 33).

——S. 405 — Essentials of offence stated. See Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 561-A. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 3599.

——S. 405 — Jurisdiction of Courts — In cases falling under first part of S. 405, offence is complete as soon as there is misappropriation or conversion with dishonest intention loss or likely loss to owner is not material — The Court within whose jurisdiction the conversion or misappropriation takes place will have jurisdiction to try the offence — If this happens in more than one jurisdiction then under Section 182 of the Criminal P. C., more than one Court would have jurisdiction — In cases which fall in the latter portion of Section 405 the offence is complete as soon as person, entrusted dishonestly uses or disposes of the property in violation of any direction of the law relating to the discharge of the trust or of the contract — In such cases it is a pure question of fact where and at what time the offence was committed — This may present difficulty — How the question has to be determined, indicated. ●——Ss. 405, 409 — Dominion over property — Two persons having authority to operate jointly on the accounts of a company with a bank — One of them delivering blank signed cheques to the other.

One R and the accused operated jointly on the accounts of an Insurance Company with a bank under the powers given by the Board of Directors:

Held, that the effect of R's delivering the blank cheques signed by him to the accused might amount to putting the accused in sole control over the funds of the Insurance Company in the Bank and the accused could alone commit criminal breach of trust in respect of the funds.

The accused did not get dominion over the funds on account of R's signing blank cheques. He got control and dominion over the funds under the powers conferred on him by the Board of Directors, by its resolution authorising him and R, to operate on the accounts of the insurance Company with the Bank. It could not therefore, be held that the accused had obtained control over the funds of the Insurance Company by cheating R and that therefore, he could not commit the offence of criminal breach of trust. ——Ss. 405, 420 — Construction and scope — Criminal breach of trust distinguished from cheating.

The word 'entrustment' or 'entrusted' though used in Section 405 is not defined in the Penal Code. The word itself conveys and includes that the person handing over the property must have confidence in the person taking the property so as to create a fiduciary relationship as between them. That confidence cannot arise when the property was acquired by the offender by some trick. Such a trick prevents any true consent arising. If the property is obtained by trick, or by any other unlawful means, then there cannot be an entrustment. 'Entrustment' means the handing over of the property by lawful means. The phrase 'any other manner' connotes any other legal manner but not otherwise. Once a property is acquired by trick or 'in any other means' by false representation to the owner thereof there is an offence under Section 420, Indian Penal Code and if the offender appropriates that amount to his use, he cannot be said to have committed an offence of criminal breach of trust, because in that case there was practically no trust created by the owner of the property. But there can be an alternative charge under Section 236, Criminal P. C., but if once an offender is punished under Section 420, Indian Penal Code, the other charge cannot be sustained. Majority view in AIR 1936 Mad 353 (FB), Foll. 20 Cut LT 80: 1954 Cri LJ 1429: AIR 1954 Orissa 213 (216) (Pt A) (Pr 11) (DB).

——S. 405 — Ingredients — Criminal breach of trust distinguished from cheating, theft and criminal misappropriation.

The offence of "criminal breach of trust" may be broadly defined as the fraudulent appropriation of another's property by a person to whom it has been entrusted or into whose hands it has lawfully come. It is akin to cheating, theft and criminal misappropriation but differs from them in important respects. In criminal breach of trust the property is lawfully acquired or acquired with the consent of the owner, but dishonestly misappropriated by the person to whom it is entrusted. In cheating, the property is wrongfully acquired in the first instance by means of a false representation. In theft the property is taken without the consent of the owner and the dishonest intention to take property exists at the time of such taking. In criminal misappropriation, the property is innocently acquired often casually and by chance, but by a subsequent change of intention the retaining becomes wrongful and fraudulent. The character of the crime depends on the secret intention of the parties which is often difficult to ascertain. To make out a case of criminal breach of trust it is generally necessary to show that the property belonged to some one other than the accused, that the accused acquired it lawfully or with the consent of the owner, that it was in the physical or constructive possession of the accused at the time of the conversion, that the accused occupied a fiduciary relationship, that his dealing with the property constituted a conversion or appropriation of the same to his own use or the use of any person other than the owner and that there was a fraudulent intent to deprive the owner of his property. 54 Punj LR 18: ILR (1951) Punj 286: AIR 1951 Punj 103 (104) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 405 — Construction — "Entrusted with property or with any dominion over property" — Charge under Section 406 — Conviction under Section 380 held legal. See Penal Code (1860), Section 380. AIR 1955 NUC (Sau) 5053 (DB).

3. "In any manner entrusted".

——Ss. 405 and 409 — Entrusting of property to public servant — Misappropriation by latter what amounts to.

One T made an application to the Superintendent of Police that one L and one B a Police Sub-Inspector met him on the way and L said to B the Sub-Inspector that though T appeared to be clad in rags he had considerable money; after this the person of T was searched and the Sub-Inspector having opened the bundle of currency notes with T, handed them over to L one by one for being returned to T, but out of the same the amount of Rs. 250 was not returned.

Held, that the information given by T related to commission of an offence by the Sub-Inspector B. The Sub-Inspector being a police officer was legally entitled to search a person found under suspicious circumstances and T in handing over the bundle of notes to the police officer must have done so in the confidence that he would get back the notes from him when the suspicion was cleared. As the currency notes were taken by the Sub-Inspector in discharge of his duty for inspection and return he was certainly entrusted with the notes within the meaning of Section 405. Thus the information given by T disclosed an offence under Section 409, a cognizable offence within the meaning of Rule 1 of para. 486 of the U. P. Police Regulations. ——S. 405 — Entrustment is essential — Cashier at treasury is entrusted with cash though ultimate responsibility is of Treasurer.

In a prosecution under Section 409, Penal Code, the prosecution has to prove that, the accused was entrusted with property. Where the cash at treasury is actually handled from day to day by the Cashier it cannot be said that he was not entrusted with the cash even though the ultimate responsibility for the cash was that of the Treasurer. AIR 1951 Ajmer 15 (16) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

——S. 405 — "In any manner entrusted" — Implied entrustment.

For the purposes of Section 405 it is not necessary that entrustment should be express. An implied entrustment will suffice.

The accused persons sold the property on the footing that the land belonged to a certain Shamlat. In the sale-deed the accused persons described themselves as members of the Shamlat Committee. There was never any claim that they were owners of the land or the sale proceeds. They acted as representatives of the Shamlat Committee, held the sale proceeds in trust for the Shamlat Committee and dishonestly misappropriated this money:

Held, that the act of the accused amounted to criminal breach of trust as defined in Section 405. AIR 1950 Ajmer 76 (77) (Pr 6).

——Ss. 405 and 406 — 'In any manner entrusted' — In order to establish offence under S. 406 prosecution has to prove that there was entrustment of moveable property belonging to another person to accused — Offence cannot be committed in respect of one's own property — In absence of any agreement to the contrary all partners hold, use and have interest in the whole of partnership property and a partner cannot be prosecuted for criminal breach of trust in respect of partnership property: AIR 1951 Punj 103 and AIR 1951 Cal 69 and AIR 1958 Andh Pra 555, Rel. on. 1964 All WR (HC) 263: 1964 All Cri R 174.

——S. 405 — Ingredients of offence — 'Entrustment' — Meaning.

There is no entrustment within the meaning of Section 405 when property is obtained by cheating: AIR 1936 Mad 353 (FB), Relied on. Even if it be assumed for the sake of argument that the accused were entrusted with the money of the depositors, they cannot be held guilty under Section 409 unless it can be shown that they dishonestly converted the money to their own use in violation of any legal contract with the depositors. 1960 All LJ 33: 1960 Cri LJ 188: 1960 All WR (HC) 67: 1960 All Cr R 84: AIR 1960 All 103 (112) (Pt I) (Pr 40) (DB).

——S. 405 — Essentials of offence.

A necessary element of the offence of the criminal breach of trust is that there should be entrustment of property to the accused. The entrustment may be in any manner. Another alternative is that the accused may get dominion of the property in any manner. In both cases the law contemplates that the accused person should receive the money and hold it on behalf of the other, so that he should be the trustee of the property. 1957 All WR (HC) 43: 1957 Cri LJ 170: 1957 All LJ 147: AIR 1957 All 122 (123) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Ss. 405, 409 — Applicability — Public servant collecting tax and fine as public servant and misappropriating it — Offence — Government not lawfully entitled to enforce landholder's alleged liability — Effect.

Under Section 405, Penal Code, provided there is entrustment of property, it matters little whether the complainant on whose behalf the property is entrusted is the owner thereof or not.

Where the accused as a Talati employed in the revenue department was invested with authority to collect land revenue and fines, ordered to be recovered under the Land Revenue Code from landholders, any amount collected as a tax or fine by him as a Talati from a landholder, becomes public fund and the accused becomes entrusted with that fund, even though it is found that no money was due from the landholder to the Government and that the Government could not have lawfully enforced the alleged liability of the landholder. Where therefore the accused makes default in paying the money collected into the Government treasury as required by the rules made in that behalf under the Land Revenue Code and misappropriates the same, he is guilty of criminal breach of trust in respect of that amount. ——Ss. 405, 406 — Absence of entrustment — No criminal breach of trust — No offence under Section 406.

B instructed A, a jeweller, to make a gold chain and handed him Rs. 300 towards the cost of gold and the cost of making it. A did not deliver the chain on the stipulated day nor did he return the money. A was therefore prosecuted for an offence under Section 406, I. P. C.

Held, though A is guilty of dishonest and dishonourable conduct in not making the chain, he could not be said to have misappropriated the money because when it was paid to him it became his. His obligation thereafter was to produce the gold chain. That he failed to do and B would recover the money from A as money paid on a consideration which had wholly failed. That however would not make act of A a criminal act, and as there was no entrustment in the case, there could be no question of an offence under Section 406. 52 Cri LJ 28: 1951 All WR (Supp) 11: AIR 1951 Cal 206 (207) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Ss. 405, 409 — "Entrusted" when used with respect to money means that the money has been transferred to the accused in circumstances which show that notwithstanding its delivery to the accused, the property in it continues to vest in the prosecutor and the money remains in the possession and conrol of the accused as a bailee to be restored to the bailor or applied in accordance with his instructions. Madh BLR 1956 Cri 405: 1956 Madh BLJ 1447: 1957 Cri LJ 179: AIR 1957 Madh B 33 (35) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

——S. 405 — Entrustment is an essential element of the offence defined in Section 405. The word "entrust" is not a term of art. In common parlance it embraces all cases in which a thing is handed over by one person to another for specific purpose. Entrustment need not be express. It may be implied. The essence of offence of criminal misappropriation is that the property of another person comes into the possession of the accused in some neutral manner and is misappropriated or converted to his own use by the accused. In a trial of B under Section 406, I. P. C. it was contended that there was no entrustment to B.

Held, that B was entrusted with money and the fact that the entrustment was on behalf of his father did not alter the character of the handing over of money to B. 1957 MPC 334: 1957 Jab LJ 706.

——S. 405 — "Entrusted".

In every offence of criminal breach of trust what must be established initially is the fact of entrustment of money or property. ——Ss. 405 and 406 — Essentials — Property vesting in accused — No entrustment — No criminal breach of trust.

One of the ingredients of the offence of criminal breach of trust is that the person accused must have been entrusted with the property in question. If the property belongs to and is owned by the accused person in his own right, it cannot be said that he was a trustee of that property for somebody else, and that by converting it to his own use he committed the offence of criminal breach of trust.

Even if the accused is a trustee with respect to the property its conversion, use or disposal by the accused person must have been in violation of any contract, express or implied, which he had made touching the discharge of such trust. One of the essential conditions of the offence of criminal breach of trust is that the property which is the subject-matter of the offence must have been entrusted to a person; a trust of some kind is necessary, and the property in respect of which criminal breach of trust can be committed must be either the property of some person other than the person accused, or the beneficial interest in or ownership of it must be in some other person and the offender must hold such property on trust for such other person or in someway for his benefit. 1953 Cri LJ 1289: AIR 1953 Pat 225 (229) (Pt D) (Pr 13).

4. "Property".

——Ss. 405, 409, 22 — 'Property' — Meaning of — Not restricted to movable property only — Dominion over property — Non-exercise of power will not make dominion nugatory.

There is no good reason to restrict the meaning of the word 'property' to movable property only when it is used without any qualification in Section 405 or in other sections of the Penal Code. Whether the offence defined in a particular section of the Penal Code can be committed in respect of any particular kind of property will depend on the fact whether that particular kind of property can be subject to the acts covered by that section.

The word 'fund' may mean actual cash resources of a particular kind (e.g., money in a drawer or a bank) or it may be a mere accountancy expression used to describe a particular category which a person uses in making up his accounts. The words "payment out of" when used in connection with the word 'fund' in its first meaning connote actual payment, e.g., by taking the money out of the drawer or drawing a cheque on the bank. When used in connection with the word 'fund' in its second meaning they connote that, for the purposes of the account in which the fund finds a place, the payment is debited to that fund.

Where the charge against the accused referred to misappropriation by him, as Chairman and Principal Officer, of funds of the Bharat Insurance Company in current account of the Company with a Bank.

Held, that the expression 'funds' in the charge was used in the first sense meaning thereby that the accused had dominion over the amount credited to the Bharat Insurance Company in the accounts of the Bank. The funds referred to in the charge did amount to 'property' within the meaning of that term in Section 405, I. P. Code. 6 Bom HCR Cr 33 and ILR 23 Cal 372, Overruled; AIR 1915 All 93 (2) and AIR 1926 Lah 385 and AIR 1936 Bom 167 and AIR 1925 All 673 and AIR 1955 SC 590 and (1942) 2 KB 228, Rel. on. Held further that the omission to inform the Bank that the accused was entitled to operate on the account might disable him to actually issue the cheques on the company's accounts, but that position did not mean that he did not have any dominion over those accounts. ——Ss. 405, 409, 467 and 477-A — "Property" — Meaning of — Includes things purchased with money entrusted.

A, a special accountant of certain Pakuthy, was entrusted with certain amount for procuring paddy. He purchased 60 paras of paddy from B but credited only 14 paras in the Government account and misappropriated the rest. In the receipt given to B the quantity of paddy purchased and amount paid therefor was shown correctly, but in the counterfoil A entered only 14 paras and its price.

In the place of the voucher given by B as per rules, A fabricated a false voucher for the lesser amount and forged on it B's signature. A was tried for offences under Sections 467, 477-A and 409, I. P. Code. The contention was that A could not be convicted under Section 409 in respect of paddy with which he was not entrusted.

Held, that word "property" occurring in Section 405, Penal Code should be interpreted to include the paddy purchased with the money he was entrusted with, particularly in view of the words "in any manner" occurring in the section. AIR 1928 Bom 521; AIR 1915 Cal 266 and 7 Cri LJ 372 (Cal), Rel. on.

(2) That A could therefore, be rightly convicted of criminal breach of trust in respect of 46 paras of paddy out of 60 paras received from B. In any case A could be convicted for criminal misappropriation in respect of that paddy.

——Ss. 405 and 409 — Criminal breach of trust — Finding that accused actually misappropriated, or connived at it is not necessary to bring home offence to accused — Extent of error of judgment in good faith and negligence.

It cannot be contended that the accused may have been negligent in his duties and may have incurred civil liability, but that he could not be held guilty of criminal breach of trust in the absence of a finding that he actually misappropriated goods or connived at such misappropriation. Wilful suffering makes a man liable. "Wilful" means deliberate or intentional and not accidental or by inadvertence. Negligence is a term of art but has distinct meanings in different jurisdictions. In Torts, damage is an essential ingredient, but that element is not necessary in the law of master and servant. In law of crimes there are a series of offences based on negligence in which loss or injury is not material. It is enough if the act is likely to cause injury or endanger life. Sections 279, 280, 285 and 287 of the Code are illustrative examples. For criminal breach of trust under Section 405, dishonesty, i. e., wrongful loss or gain, has to be established.

Apart from the question of loss, another ingredient which runs through every branch of the law of negligence is that there must be a duty to take care. The nature of the duty and the standard of care will vary according to the nature of the office or the contract and the circumstances. Generally speaking, the standard that the law enjoins is governed by the knowledge and skill that the office or occupation requires, by the magnitude of the task and by the gravity of the consequences that are likely to ensue if the requisite degree or care is not exercised. Good faith imports the exercise of due care and attention. A person can be excused for having committed an error of judgment only if he exercised due care and attention and his conduct makes it clear that there was not negligence according to reasonable standards. The standard of care required is that of a reasonably prudent man who acts with the care and caution required of a person in his position dealing with a matter of similar importance. If such a person could have acted in a similar way, then only could the accused be excused for a mere error of judgment or innocent dereliction of duty.

Held, on facts that the appellant's conduct was deliberate, that it was not a mere error of judgment and his negligence was culpable. Held, also that, even if someone else committed the misappropriation, the appellant wilfully suffered him to do so: AIR 1961 SC 751 (756), Rel. on. 1965 (1) Cri LJ 539: AIR 1965 All 233 (236) (Pt B) (Prs 12, 13, 15 to 18).

——S. 405 — Company directors — Position of — Directors are trustees of funds under their control and not of debts due to company — Wrongful remission of debt — No wrongful dealing with funds — Directors cannot be found guilty of criminal breach of trust.

The director of a company is a trustee in respect of those funds of the company which are under his control. Where the control over the funds of a company is vested in the Board of Directors, but in fact it is the Chairman of the Board of Directors who exercises effective control over the funds, in such a case, it is the Chairman and not the Board of Directors who will be in the position of a trustee, and if he deals with the funds in a manner which is beyond his power, he will be guilty of the offence of criminal breach of trust. (1894) 1 Ch D 616, Rel. on; AIR 1931 Cal 184 (FB), Distinguished.

However, in respect of the debts owed to a company, the Directors cannot be deemed to be in the position of trustees, and if they deal with such debts in writing off some debts wrongfully and thus cause loss to the company, they may be guilty of some other offence (example, under Section 422, Penal Code) but not of criminal breach of trust. There can be criminal breach of trust in respect of property entrusted with a person or the property, the dominion over which is entrusted to a person. The property must be tangible property in the hands of the directors or under their control and, therefore, the debts due to a company cannot be the subject-matter of criminal breach of trust. ——Ss. 405, 409 — Dishonest conversion to one's use — What amounts to.

In a prosecution for criminal breach of trust direct evidence of dishonest conversion to the accused's own use, of the money entrusted with him, can seldom be found, and such dishonest intention and conversion have to be inferred from the proved facts and circumstances of each case.

Thus where it is established that the accused, a Chairman of certain local board, retained Rs. 33,000 and odd belonging to the local Board, he handed over charge to his successor and did not refund any portion of the same at any time, that considering his assets he was living beyond his means, installed a Press and was publishing a weekly and incurred considerable expenditure on the same during the period when he was the Chairman of the Board and that when he vacated his office as Chairman of that Board he made desperate efforts to raise money but his efforts did not prove successful;

Held, that considering the means of the accused, the expenses that he was incurring when he was Chairman and his inability to raise even a portion of the money admitted by him to have been retained with him, the reasonable inference must be that the money was appropriated by him for his own use. 25 Cut LT 269: 1959 Cri LJ 1197: AIR 1959 Orissa 159 (165) (Pt C) (Pr 21).

——S. 405 — Applicability — Entrustment of property proved but misappropriation or conversion not proved — Offence is not established.

For an offence of criminal breach of trust besides showing that the property was entrusted to the accused it is further necessary to show that he had dishonestly misappropriated or converted it to his own use. Therefore, in the absence of any allegation of misappropriation or conversion of the truck by the petitioner, offence under Section 405, I. P. Code will not be constituted. 1964 (2) Cri LJ 730: ILR (1964) 14 Raj 862: AIR 1964 Raj 267 (270) (Pt D) (Pr 7).

6. Disposal in violation of any legal contract.

——Ss. 405, 408 — Accused appointed shop-manager by Co-operative Federation under a written agreement embodying arbitration clause — Entrustment of goods for public sale — Embezzlement — Agreement cannot stiffle criminal prosecution — Contract Act (1872), Section 23 — Words and Phrases — "Embezzlement" — Co-operative Societies Act (1912).

The accused was appointed a manager of a shop of a District Co-operative Federation. His rights and liabilities were governed by a written agreement with the Federation. He was entrusted with the grains and other material for sale to the public. It was his duty to maintain correct account and to deposit the sale proceeds of every day with the Federation. There was an embezzlement for which he was tried and convicted under Section 408. On appeal it was submitted on his behalf that in view of the agreement, it was not open to the Federation to launch a criminal complaint, since all the disputes between the parties were to be settled by means of an arbitration award under the Co-operative Societies Act and that the disputes between the parties were to be settled by means of an arbitration award under the Co-operative Societies Act and that it was only a civil liability.

Held, (i) That when the grain and the money of the Federation was entrusted with the accused with a clear contract that he will deposit the sale proceeds it was not open to him not to have deposited the sale proceeds and to have appropriated it to his own use. He not having complied with the terms of the agreement and having appropriated the amount to his own use clearly committed a criminal breach of trust.

(ii) that although every breach of trust does not give rise to a criminal prosecution but as soon as it is found that there has been embezzlement the person who has embezzled makes himself liable to criminal prosecution. The dictionary meaning of the word "embezzle" is "to appropriate oneself by a breach of trust" and 'embezzlement' means 'a fraudulent appropriation of other's property'. Therefore, as soon as embezzlement is found to be proved, the person embezzling commits a criminal breach of trust and as defined by Section 405 he makes himself liable to criminal prosecution. There cannot be an agreement to the effect that even if there is an embezzlement the person who has embezzled will not be prosecuted and the matter will be referred to an arbitration. Permitting such an agreement would be contrary to Section 23 of the Contract Act which prohibits an agreement which would defeat the provisions of any law. Agreements to stiffle criminal prosecutions, could not be allowed. They are bad for, it is not open to parties to make a trade of felony or to take the administration of justice out of the hands of authorities and themselves determine what should be done. 1965 All LJ 538: ILR (1965) 2 All 82.

——Ss. 405, Illus. (c), 406 — 'In any manner entrusted' interpretation — Giving money to goldsmith for preparing ornaments when amounts to criminal breach of trust.

Entrustment arises whenever something, whether it be money or any other thing, is given to some person with some direction as to how it should be dealt with. Thus where gold is given to a goldsmith whose business is merely to prepare ornaments, there is clearly entrustment of that gold to the goldsmith for the purpose of preparing the ornaments desired by the person who gives the gold.

But it is a question in each case depending upon the facts of the case whether payment of money would amount to entrustment or merely to payment of price in advance. Where a person to whom the payment is made is a jeweller and has stock of gold, ornaments and precious stones with him, the payment would generally be an advance of price. But where the money is paid to a goldsmith viz., a person who makes ornaments and charges for his labour the payment amounts to an entrustment of the money to the goldsmith with a direction that he should use it for purchasing gold from the market and preparing the ornaments desired by the person making the payment. Such a case would be similar to the case in illustration (c) to Section 405, and if such goldsmith dishonestly converted it to his own use in violation of the implied contract that he should use it to purchase gold and prepare ornaments, he will be guilty of criminal breach of trust, and an offence under Section 406, I. P. Code, will be made out. AIR 1951 Cal 206, Disting. 1955 Raj LW 545: ILR (1955) 5 Raj 907: 1956 Cri LJ 107: AIR 1956 Raj 20 (20) (Prs 5, 6) (DB).

The temporary retention of money does not by itself amount to criminal breach of trust. It amounts to that offence only if the ingredient of dishonest misappropriation or conversion etc., can be correctly inferred. Hence, even if a person is required under rules to deposit the amount entrusted in the Treasury within a few days, the failure to do so will not by itself amount to the offence of criminal breach of trust unless it is proved that there was dishonest misappropriation. (1961) 2 Guj HCR 117: (1961) 2 Guj LR 262: 1961 (1) Cri LJ 654 (Guj).

——Ss. 405, 409 — Money entrusted to public servant — Retention and remittance into treasury after six months — Offence — Proof of dishonest intention — Inference of.

In a case of criminal misappropriation it is not necessary that the prosecution should always prove that the money entrusted to the accused was applied in any particular manner or for any particular purpose. It is sufficient if dishonest intention can be gathered from the circumstances.

The accused was a public servant whose duty was to collect land revenue and other Government dues which he was required, under the rules to remit into the treasury before the close of each treasury month. He collected certain amounts and remitted them into Government treasury several months after their collection and that also, after an enquiry was started against him in which the accused appeared, before Tahsildar and asked for a day's time. He remitted the amount in treasury with interest.

Held, that the fact that he could not produce the amount immediately was a circumstance to show that the amount must have been misappropriated by him. In remitting the amounts into the treasury he paid not merely the amounts actually collected but also the interest thereon. The relevant records relating to the collection show that such interest was not paid by the persons concerned. The intention to wrongfully deprive the Government of the use of the money for a time and to secure the use of the same for his benefit during that time is, therefore, clearly established and the circumstances thus conclusively prove that there was dishonest use or disposition of the money in violation of the direction prescribing the mode in which the trust was to be discharged. The conviction under Section 409 was, therefore, upheld. 1959 Ker LT 549: 1959 Mad LJ (Cr) 638: 1959 Ker LJ 729.

——Ss. 405, 406 — "In any manner entrusted" — Meaning — Bicycle given to accused for specific purpose and specified period — Nature of relationship — Conversion of machine by accused — Offence.

The word 'trust' which appears in Section 405 is a comprehensive expression which has been used not only to cover the relationship of trustee and beneficiary but also those of bailor and bailee, master and servant, pledgor and pledgee, guardian and ward, and all other relations which postulate the existence of a fiduciary relationship between the complainant and the accused. The expression 'entrusted' has a corresponding meaning and embraces all cases in which goods are 'entrusted' (that is voluntarily handed over for a specific purpose) and are dishonestly disposed of in violation of any direction of law or in violation of the contract.

Where the complainant delivers his bicycle to the accused for use for a specific purpose and a specified period upon contract that after the expiry of the said period the machine would be returned to him and the relationship between the complainant and the accused is that of a bailor and bailee, and where the accused dishonestly disposes of the machine and appropriates the money to his own use he is guilty of an offence punishabel under Section 406. 54 Punj LR 18: ILR (1951) Punj 286: AIR 1951 Punj 103 (105) (Pt B) (Prs 8, 11) (DB).

——S. 405 — Dishonest intention — Proof — (Evidence Act (1872), Sections 101 to 104).

In an offence of the criminal breach of trust dishonest intention is the gist of the offence. Under Section 405 of the Penal Code dishonest misappropriation or conversion to his own use by the accused is an essential ingredient. It is the duty of the prosecution to prove that the accused acted with dishonest intention. As a general rule every man is taken to intend the natural and probable consequences of his act. In some cases the intention may be inferred as a necessary conclusion from the nature of the act done. But in other cases it is to be proved just as much as any other fact necessary to constitute the offence. In an offence of criminal breach of trust the intention is to be inferred from all other facts and circumstances of the case. Breach of trust by itself may not be with dishonest intention. If on the totality of the evidence there is room for more than one view as to the prisoner's intent and the Court is left in doubt as to the intention of the accused, the accused is entitled to an acquittal. In cases of criminal breach of trust and other allied offences, the accused sometimes claims to himself the right to take or retain the property, which is the subject-matter of the offence. In doing this he is taking the plea that he did not act with dishonest intention. In such cases it is the duty of the Court to consider all the facts and circumstances appearing in the case as to how far the accused can be said to have acted with dishonest intention bearing in mind that it is for the prosecution to prove the dishonest intention. A person who is pleading a claim of right may be acting without dishonest intention if he is asserting bona fide what he believes to be a lawful claim, even though it may be unfounded in law or in fact. Mere assertion of claim of right at the trial is not sufficient. It is the state of mind of the accused at the time of the commission of the offence which is material. The fact that the claim may turn out to be altogether unsupportable in law or that in fact that accused should not have relied on such a claim are not considerations which may ultimately decide the criminal responsibility of the accused. ILR (1956) 6 Raj 942.

——Ss. 405, 400 — Applicability — Delivery of paddy at mill by Government for converting same into rice and delivery back to Government — Failure to deliver — Offence.

Certain paddy was delivered at a mill to the petitioner by the Government for turning it into rice and then handing back to the Government.

There was an agreement between the parties that for every 100 mds. of paddy delivered, the petitioner would deliver 63 mds. of rice. The petitioner never delivered the rice in spite of repeated demands. It was clear from the circumstances that the petitioner never intended to take any steps for supplying the rice as he was expected to do. Held, that the petitioner was guilty under Section 409, Penal Code. The delivery of the paddy at the mill could not lead one to the conclusion that the paddy had ceased to be the property of the Government and it had become the property of the petitioner. ——S. 405 — "Dishonestly uses or disposes of that property" — Accused receiver of mill — Payment over and above market price received — Failure to account — Offence, if committed.

The accused, a receiver of a cotton mill appointed by the High Court, in the exercise of discretion conferred on him by the High Court, demanded and received payment over and above the market price in respect of bales allotted to a shopkeeper. The accused was given absolute powers by orders of the High Court and therefore he was well within his rights in demanding the extra payments. The accused failed to account for this extra payment. It was contended that the extra payment was made with the object of propitiating the accused, that it was paid as a bribe, that when it was paid the offence became complete and that therefore, there could not be any subsequent misappropriation of the money nor could there be criminal breach of trust in respect of that money which was intended by both parties to go into the pocket of the accused.

Held, that the accused was clearly liable for criminal breach of trust as defined in Section 405 as it could be said within the meaning of that section that the accused who was entrusted with the property of the mill and its products dishonestly used or disposed of that property in violation of the direction of law which prescribed the mode in which such trust was to be discharged by him. 1951 Ker LT 503: 1952 Cri LJ 766: ILR (1951) Trav Co 765: AIR 1952 Trav Co 128 (131) (Pt A) (Pr 12) (DB).

To establish an offence of criminal breach of trust it must be proved that the ownership or beneficial interest in the property in respect of which criminal breach of trust is alleged to have been committed, must be in some person other than the accused and the latter must hold it on account of some person or in some way for his (beneficiary's) benefit.

The State Trading Corporation of India, Ltd., New Delhi, allotted some quota of skimmed milk powder for sale in Rajasthan State and Rajasthan Government while appointing different dealers for different areas, appointed the accused as a dealer for Ajmer area and allotted a certain quota of skimmed milk powder to him. The allotment was made subject to two conditions. However, in breach of these conditions he sold to a Calcutta party for exporting the same outside the Ajmer area. On these facts the accused was challenged under Section 406, I. P. Code. On the question whether in the circumstances of the case a charge under Section 406 could be framed.

Held, that the fact that the seller had agreed with the State to sell the skimmed milk powder to bona fide consumers in the Ajmer district at certain fixed price was not sufficient to create any beneficial interest in the skimmed milk powder in them. The skimmed milk powder therefore could not be said to have been entrusted to the accused within the meaning of Section 405. There was therefore no legal basis to frame a charge under Section 406, I. P. Code, against the accused. ILR (1947) 1 Cal 97; AIR 1963 Pat 223, Rel. on. 1963 Raj LW 638: ILR (1963) 13 Raj 1124: 1964 (1) Cri LJ 614 (615, 616) (Prs 5, 9) (Raj).

——S. 405 — Essentials — Civil and criminal breach of trust — Distinction.

Every breach of trust is not criminal. It may be intentional without being dishonest or it may appear to be dishonest without being really so. In such cases the Court should be slow to move and this caution is all the more necessary because there is a tendency to secure speedy results by having recourses to criminal law.

It is only when there is evidence of a mental act of fraudulent misappropriation that the commission of embezzlement becomes an offence punishable as criminal breach of trust. It is this mental act of fraudulent misappropriation that distinguishes an embezzlement amounting to a civil wrong or tort from the offence of criminal breach of trust punishable under Section 406, Penal Code. Every offence of criminal breach of trust involves a civil wrong in respect of which the complainant may seek redress in a civil Court : but every breach of trust, in the absence of 'mens rea', is not criminal. 52 Cri LJ 1178 (Lah), Foll.

Thus, where paddy is supplied to the proprietor of a mill and he agrees to supply rice in lieu thereof, the mere shortage in the delivery of rice cannot establish dishonesty in any manner unless the mental act of fraudulent misappropriation is established by the prosecution by cogent evidence. 1955 Cri LJ 1636: AIR 1955 Tripura 35 (38) (Pt A) (Prs 12, 17).

Where money is received by a cashier from the Stores department of a Railway to be appropriated by him in accordance with the standing accounts instructions and the cashier alone is in charge of the keys of his safe and the cash box where according to him the amounts in question had been kept, then it cannot be maintained that he was not entrusted with any moneys . The accused was a purchasing agent of a Co-operative Society for procurement of foodgrains during a particular kharif year. The terms of his agreement were that for the work done he should receive his travelling and daily allowances and also a commission of eight per cent on the net profits of the society. The accused was given a certain sum of money for the purchase of foodgrains without any stipulation as to the time before which the purchase was to be completed. There was some delay and therefore the society terminated the agency even before the expiry of the kharif year and demanded the refund of the amount paid to the accused for the purchase. The accused in turn claimed that money was due to him on account of commission and asked the society to set off the amount so due. There was no direct evidence of the accused having dishonestly misappropriated or converted to his own use the money.

Held, that the conviction under Sec. 409 was wrong. Admittedly the society owed money to the accused but failed to clarify how much it was. In the circumstances it was a case where there was dispute for settlement of accounts and therefore a civil dispute which was entirely outside the purview of the criminal Court. Where in proceedings under Section 145, Criminal P. C. standing crops are attached and kept in the custody of sapurdar, it is the bounden duty of the Magistrate under the provisions of Clause (8), Section 145 to make an order to the effect that the property should be sold and the sale proceeds of such property should be kept in the custody of the sapurdar which is on the completion of the inquiry, could be made over to the person entitled to it. Where the Magistrate gives the standing crop in the custody of sapurdar, who undertakes to produce the crop when ordered by the Court, and after the lapse of six years sends notice to the sapurdar to file accounts of the crop from the date on which the custody was given to him, the notice given to him is not in strict terms of that contract, which was that he would produce these crops when required. The notice is therefore not touching the discharge of the trust which he had undertaken upon himself. When no evidence was given in the case to prove that he misappropriated the property entrusted to him or converted it to his own use, and that he did so in violation of the conditions of the trust, his conviction under Section 406, I. 15. Pledge.

——Ss. 405 and 409 — Offence under Sec. 409 — Criminal breach of trust — Entrustment of property and trust — Property pledged — — Dominion of pledgee over property pledged — (Contract Act (1872), S. 172).

For an offence under Section 409, Penal Code, the first essential ingredient to be proved is that the property was entrusted. When Sec. 405 which defines "criminal breach of trust" speaks of a person being in any manner entrusted with property, it does not contemplate the creation of a trust with all the technicalities of the law of trust. It contemplates the creation of a relationship whereby the owner of property makes it over to another person to be retained by him until a certain contingency arises or to be disposed of by him on the happening of a certain event. The person who transfers possession of the property to the second party still remains the legal owner of the property and the person in whose favour possession is so transferred has only the custody of the property to be kept or disposed of by him for the benefit of the other party, the person so put in possession only obtaining a special interest by way of a claim for money advanced or spent upon the safe keeping of the thing or such other incidental expenses as may have been incurred by him.

Whether securities have been delivered with a view to cover the repayment of any overdraft by the pledgor Bank to the pledgee Bank and it is agreed that they are to be disposed of on the arising of a stipulated contingency only, then by the very fact of the delivery of the securities to the bailee the latter becomes a trustee in terms of the contract, not for all purposes, but only for the limited purpose indicated by the agreement between the parties. The pledgor in such a case only transfers his possession of the property to the pledgee who has a special interest in the property of enforcing his charge for payment of an overdraft, if any, whereas the property continues to be owned by the pledgor. If in such a case there is no overdraft the pledgor Bank can ask for a return of the securities at any time. And the securities having continued to be the property of the pledgor Bank the pledgee Bank, or its Managing Director, has no right to deal with them.

In such case the Managing Director, holding a power-of-attorney on behalf of the pledgee Bank, can be said either to have been entrusted with the property in a derivative sense or to have dominion over the securities as a banker; and thus in either case, the first essential condition for the application of Section 409 Penal Code, is fulfilled. The act is clearly dishonest as the accused intends to make wrongful gain of the ornament by making an additional use of it as a pledge against another independent debt, and further causes wrongful loss to the complainant in keeping her out of the ornament in spite of her payment of the entire dues. 16. Vendor and purchaser.

——S. 405 — Tailor refusing to deliver clothes unless payment of tailoring is made — It is not case of criminal breach of trust unless it is shown that clothes were not made out of material supplied and that he had disposed of material — It would be criminal breach of trust if upon payment being tendered, delivery of clothes is refused.

Where a tailor to whom cloth was given by the complainant for preparing shirts out of it, refuses to deliver either the shirts or the cloth to the complainant and claims a lien upon it for the price, he cannot be convicted for criminal breach of trust, unless the complainant establishes that the accused had never worked on the material and had disposed of it in some other way. The defence here might well be true and the shirts withheld for the payment and the accused may have had lien on the shirts. The lien arises even before the tender of delivery of goods.

Obiter :— If the shirts are not delivered even after the tender is made of the amount due for making them, then the case of criminal breach of trust might arise. 51 Cri LJ 336: 1950 All WR (Supp) 5: 1950 All Cri Cas 21: AIR 1950 Cal 35 (36) (Prs 5, 6, 8) (DB).

Thus, where a person takes away ornaments on approval and promises to return them in the evening the same day, her failure to do so is not enough to sustain a charge under either Section 406 or 420. Such a case is essentially of a civil nature coming under Section 24 of the Sale of Goods Act. 1953 Nag LJ 347: 1953 Cri LJ 1586: ILR (1953) Nag 813: AIR 1953 Nag 301 (302) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

17. Partner.

● ——Ss. 405, 409 — Criminal breach of trust — Entrustment of dominion over property is essential — Dominion of partner over partnership asset — No entrustment unless there is special agreement — Agreement authorising working partner to recover money and to utilise recoveries for partnership business — Failure to deposit money in bank — Not an offence under Section 409, I. P. C.

Before a person can be said to have committed criminal breach of trust within the meaning of Section 405, I. P. C. it must be established that he was either entrusted with or entrusted with dominion over property which he is said to have converted to his own use. In order to establish "entrustment of dominion" over property to an accused person the mere existence of that person's dominion over property is not enough. It must be further shown that his dominion was the result of entrustment. In the case of a partnership, every partner has dominion over the partnership property by reason of the fact that he is a partner. This is a kind of dominion which every owner of property has over his property. But it is not dominion of this kind which satisfies the requirements of Section 405. The prosecution must further establish that dominion over the assets or a particular asset of the partnership was, by a special agreement between the parties, entrusted to the accused person. If in the absence of such a special agreement a partner receives money belonging to the partnership he cannot be said to have received it in a fiduciary capacity or, in other words, cannot be held to have been "entrusted" with dominion over partnership properties. Where, therefore, under an agreement between the partners the working partner is authorised to recover the dues of the partnership and to spend the money for the business of the partnership, he cannot be said to have been guilty of criminal breach of trust even with respect to the dues realised by him from certain person by not depositing them in the bank as alleged by the prosecution. AIR 1933 Cal 582; trust — (Partnrship Act (1932), Sections 13 and 15).

——Ss. 405, 406 and 409 — Applicability — Partner — If can be guilty of criminal breach of trust — (Partnership Act (1932), Sections 13 and 15).

The law of partnership is but a branch of the law of agency and Section 18 of the Partnership Act provides that subject to the other provisions of the Act a partner is an agent of the firm. But this capacity does not derogate from his capacity as a partner; nor by virtue of his management is he divested of his capacity as a partner. As a matter of fact according to the provisions of Section 9 all partners are bound to carry on business and to render true accounts and full information of all things affecting the firm to any partner. The management of the business is the right and duty of every partner. Ordinarily no partner is entitled to receive remuneration for managing the business but Section 13 of the Partnership Act permits fixation of some remuneration by agreement; and the fixation of such remuneration does not alter his status as a partner.

In the absence of any agreement to the contrary, all the partners hold, use and have interest in the whole of the partnership property. Hence in respect of ordinary partnership no entrustment of property within the meaning of Section 405, I. P. Code, is possible. Entrustment contemplated by this section is of the property which is not his and which he does not hold in his right. The entrustment or dominion of the property must be one as against the other. The partnership property cannot therefore, attract the operation of an offence of Section 406, I. P. Code. The sections relating to criminal breach of trust do not admit of an interpretation that there can be entrustment of property belonging to one's own self.

Of course, the case would be different if there be a contract as contemplated by Section 15, Partnership Act between the partners that a particular property would be the separate property of the partner. Unless there is a special agreement which admits of operation of Section 405, I. P. Code, a partner cannot be prosecuted for criminal breach of trust in respect of partnership property. Where one partner is given authority by the other partners to collect moneys or property he is entrusted with dominion over that property and if he dishonestly misappropriates it, he comes within Section 405 of the Code.

Usually, where a partner is prosecuted for criminal breach of trust, it is very difficult to prove a dishonest intent which is an essential ingredient of the offence. But where the intent is clearly established there is no reason why a partner could not be convicted of criminal breach of trust in respect of a partnership asset. 60 Bom LR 1413: 1959 Nag LJ 41: ILR (1959) Bom 670: 1959 Cri LJ 1032: AIR 1959 Bom 488 (488, 489) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 13) (DB).

● ——Ss. 405, 496 — Partner it can be charged under S. 406 in respect of partnership property by another partner.

Per Full Bench — A charge under S. 406, Indian Penal Code cannot be framed against a person who, according to the complainant, is a partner with him and is accused of the offence in respect of property belonging to both of them as partners.

The cases in 13 Beng. LR 307 (FB) & AIR 1940 Cal. 371 cannot be regarded as correctly decided if they lay down any general rules applicable to prosecution of partners for offences under S. 406, Penal Code, in respect of property received or held by such partners on behalf of the partnership in the ordinary course of partnership dealings. However the cases may be regarded as rightly decided if they are confined to cases where under special agreements made between the parties entrustment of the property or dominion over it was given to any particular partner.

Per P. B. Mukharji J. — The reason for holding that a partner cannot be prosecuted by another partner for criminal breach of trust in respect of partnership property u/s 406, I. P. C. is two-fold. The nature, character and incidents of partnership property are such that during the subsistence of the partnership there cannot be, except by special agreement, any entrustment or dominion and secondly partnership property is not a specific and ascertainable property and is of so equivocal and problematic a nature until dissolution and accounts, that it is not susceptible to be used in a manner which can bring into operation Sec. 405, Penal Code. It is only when such ordinary character and nature of the partnership property are varied by special contract of partnership so as to create entrustment of any specific property in favour of one partner as against the others or so as to give exclusive dominion of such property to one partner as against the other that there can be any scope of application of S. 405, I. ——S. 405 — Applicability to Mahomedan co-owners.

The proposition of law that S. 405 does not apply to partners as they are joint owners or co-owners of the partnership property, that is to say, of the common stock, does not apply to the case of Mahomedan co-owner of whom it cannot be said that he is co-owner of the whole of the stock. The position of a Mahomedan co-owner is that he has a specific share in the property.

——Ss. 405, 406 — Charge of criminal breach of trust against partner.

In order to establish a charge of criminal breach of trust, it is essential to prove that the accused was entrusted with property or with the dominion over the property. The word "entrustment" connotes this that the accused holds the property in a fiduciary capacity. It is difficult to conceive of circumstances under which it could be held that there was an entrustment of partnership property by one partner to another. Hence, a partner can never be found guilty of criminal breach of trust with respect to partnership property. ILR (1949) 1 Cal 454.

It is not the function of a criminal Court to go into the accounts of partnership and determine the specific amount due to one partner from the other, for his share of profits. 18. Debtor and creditor.

——S. 405 — Trust and loan — Distinction.

One difference between a trust and a loan is that in the case of a trust the article cannot be returned before the object of the trust is carried out whereas in the case of a loan the article can be returned even before the object of the loan is carried out. 1960 Cri LJ 857: AIR 1960 All 387 (389) (Pt B) (Pr 8).

——Ss. 405, 406, 409 — Applicability — Debtor and creditor — Relationship.

The one underlying idea in Section 405 is undoubtedly this that the property which is the subject-matter of entrustment or in respect of which dominion is passed over to the accused, does not even for the time being, become the property of the accused which he could use for his own purposes. Thus the section does not cover the case of a loan or of an advance of money when the borrower or the depositee intends to use or utilise that money, for the time being, till he is in possession of it, although he may have to return an equivalent amount later on to the person making the advance with or without interest, or compensation for the use thereof.

The amount of Rs. 10,000 was handed over by the complainant to the accused to be sent to his firm in the first instance, and to be held by the firm for the purchase of goods; no interest was payable and the receipt of the amount was denied when it was demanded.

Held, that upon the facts a relation of debtor and creditor was created between the parties. The beneficial ownership in the money so advanced to the accused was intended to be transferred to him and his partners in the firm, and it could not be said that it was intended that he was to keep the money intact in his possession and make no use of it at all whether or not interest was paid on it. The amount was not to be returned in specie, and the depositee was entitled to use the amount in his own business, but was bound to return the equivalent amount according to the directions of the complainant. This was not a case of entrustment of money in respect of which the accused was supposed to have committed any breach of trust within the meaning of Section 409. 1954 All WR (HC) 191: 1954 All LJ 97: 1954 Cri LJ 1293: AIR 1954 AM 583 (583, 587) (Pt B) (Prs 10, 11, 13) (DB).

——Ss. 405 and 406 — "Entrustment" — Connotation of — Debtor and creditor — Non-compliance by creditor with request of debtor to make endorsement of payment on promissory note — Offence.

There is no entrustment within the definition of Section 405, when a payee or the mortgagee receives payment from his debtor or the mortgagor. The word 'entrustment' is not a term of law or of art. It is an ordinary word connoting that property was handed over to another in whom confidence was reposed for a specific purpose.

The question of trust would not arise at all when money is paid by debtor in discharge of a debt if the creditor does not give a receipt thereof or make the necessary endorsements or even give effect to his promise in that behalf. It does not make any difference even if there is an agreement governing it.

The essential ingredients of an offence under Section 406 would be lacking even in such a case. The very essence of criminal breach of trust is misappropriation or conversion to his own use in violation of any direction of law prescribing the mode in which such trust is to be discharged. The notion of a trust cannot be imported into a case like this. AIR 1940 Mad 329, Disting.; AIR 1946 Pat 125; AIR 1919 Cal 155, Rel. on. AIR 1955 NUC (Andh Pra) 4814.

See also Penal Code (1860), Section 409.

——S. 405 — Entrusted — Meaning of — Dealing between bank and customer — When amounts to entrustment — (Words and Phrases).

Entrustment within the meaning of Section 405 implies transference of possession of property for some purpose in accordance with the directions of the transferor, proprietary rights in the property continuing to vest in the transferor.

When there are money dealings between a bank and its customer the question generally arises whether the transaction amounts to a deposit or to a bailment for a specific purpose. In the former case there arises a relationship of debtor and creditor between the bank and the customer and the money becomes the bank's money, only to be repaid when demanded. In the latter case, proprietary rights in the money remain with the customer and there comes into being a trust in the hands of the bank with regard to the disposal of the money in accordance with the terms of the contract between the parties. No question however of the commission of the offence of criminal breach of trust arises in the former case inasmuch as the money in question becomes the bank's money and no trust in regard to it arises: 1950 All LJ 808; AIR 1954 All 583; (1848) 2 HLC 28 and AIR 1949 EP 373, Ref.

——S. 405 — Burden of proof — 'Entrusted' — Proof — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Sections 523 and 550).

The accused was alleged to have unlawfully cut and carried away the paddy and straw from the complainant's field and refused to honour the Zimmanama executed by them. He was therefore charged under Section 406, Penal Code.

Held, that where the entrustment depended upon the existence and genuineness of the Zimmanama it was the duty of the prosecution to prove the execution of that document by cogent evidence. There could not be entrustment unless, it could be said that the Zimmanama, when brought into existence became an active document which operated retrospectively; in other words, it was only when the Zimmanama considered as a document evidencing the prior right of the police to seize the stock and their act of seizing it that the further right to take a document by way of receipt or bond from the persons entrusted can be said to arise. One very important item of evidence would have been proof of the seizure itself. The seizure list might have shown what exactly was the immediate disposition of the paddy itself before the purported seizure. But in the absence of the seizure list which was really the parent document it was impossible to hold that there was entrustment by virtue of the operation of the Zimmanama. Unless the Zimmanama is considered to be a valid document, validly entrusting the accused with the custody of the paddy and straw, the accused could not be convicted of a breach of that undertaking of that trust sought to be created by the Zimmanama itself. 1957 Cri LJ 367: AIR 1957 Cal 148 (149) (Pr 7).

——S. 405 — Burden of proof — "Misappropriates or converts to his own use".

It is for the prosecution to prove that the amount in question had been misappropriated by the acccused. It is not incumbent upon the accused to prove the opposite. Of course, onus of proof is a shifting entity, so that if the prosecution had led some evidence in support of non-payment of the amounts in question by the accused to the proper authority, the burden would shift on to the accused to rebut that evidence and to prove that he had in fact paid the amount to that authority. The circumstance of the accused having denied receipt of the amount in question does not absolve the prosecution from proving the aforesaid ingredient. ——S. 405 — Evidence and presumption as to breach.

The usual evidence of breach of trust in regard to moneys received for the purpose of payment over is either non-payment, or non-accounting or false accounting. Breach of trust is a definite act, like theft or misappropriation, and the above circumstance does not constitute, it but merely evidences it. Where it is the duty of the accused to pay over money at once or any different periods his non-payment is prima facie evidence that he has wrongfully appropriated it to himself. But this presumption may be negatived by evidence that the delay was caused by forgetfulness or that it was acquiesced in by the person to whom the money was due. 1953 Mad WN 929: 1956 Cr LJ 1079: AIR 1956 Mad 452 (453) (Pt A) (Pr 8).

——Ss. 405, 409 — Criminal breach of trust by public servant — Burden of proof—Burden rests on prosecution — Section 106, Evidence Act (1872) does not affect prosecution's initial onus of proving guilt of accused.

The essential thing to be proved in case of criminal breach of trust is whether the accused was actuated by dishonest intention or not. The failure to account for the amount proved to have been received by the accused or giving a false account of its use is generally considered to be a strong circumstance against the accused. It is not necessary or possible in every case to prove in what precise manner the accused person has dealt with or appropriated the property of his master. In the case of a public servant charged with misappropriation of monies, the element of offence of criminal breach of trust will be established if the prosecution proves entrustment of the monies which he was under a duty to account and had not done so. If the failure to account was due to circumstances as pleaded by the accused in defence, then those facts being within the accused's knowledge, it is for the accused to explain them. Section 106 of the Evidence Act does not affect the prosecution's initial onus of proving the guilt of the accused. The onus rests on the prosecution and is not shifted on to the accused by reason of Section 106. Section 106 would not absolve the prosecution from the duty of proving that a crime was committed even though it is established that the accused had special knowledge on the point. If any explanation that the accused chooses to give is not proved beyond doubt, he cannot claim to be innocent; but even so, if his explanation shows any reasonable doubt on the prosecution story he would be entitled to an acquittal not because he proves the facts and circumstances referred to, but because the prosecution has failed to establish his guilt beyond reasonable doubt. ——S. 405 — Burden of proof — Duty of prosecution — Postal peon charged with criminal breach of trust in respect of money order entrusted to him for delivery to addressee — Accused alleging delivery to person whom he considered to be addressee on identification — Accused new to place — Prosecution must establish not only entrustment but also how the money was used — Section 106, Evidence Act, places burden on accused to prove the plea which absolves him but prosecution is not relieved of its duty to prove guilt of accused — It is enough for accused to show that his defence is not improbable — (Evidence Act (1872), Section 106) — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 367). AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 4686.

——Ss. 405 and 406 — Burden of proof — Admission by accused having received money but defence that he handed it over to proper person — Onus is not on accused to prove payment but on prosecution to prove non-payment — (Evidence Act (1872), Sections 101-103). AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 127.

——S. 405 — Misappropriation and conversion — Onus.

It is well settled that once it has been proved that the money was entrusted to a person, the burden shifts on him to show what he did with the money, and if he completely denies having received the money, the presumption is that he misappropriated it or converted it to his own use. AIR 1940 Mad 329, Distinguished. AIR 1936 Pat 350, Rel. on. 1952 Raj LW 194: 1953 Cri LJ 835: ILR (1952) 2 Raj 341: AIR 1953 Raj 117 (118) (Pt C) (Pr 6).

——S. 405 — Burden of proof.

Although the burden of proving entrustment of money rests on the prosecution, if it is proved that the accused was not in possession of the amount entrusted to him, it is for the accused to prove satisfactorily that he had not embezzled or misappropriated the amount but that the amount had been stolen, or that he had been robbed of it. It is not for the prosecution to prove how he disposed of the amount. 3 Sar LR 74: 1950 All WR (Supp) 113: AIR 1950 Sau 13 (15) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 405 — Burden of proof — No 'mens rea' — Effect.

In criminal cases, the onus of proving the general issue never shifts and it lies upon the prosecution to prove beyond reasonable doubt the guilt of the accused. Where the accused gives some explanation which may reasonably be true, even though it may not be believed by the Judge or the jury, he or they must acquit him, because the onus lying on the prosecution of establishing the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt has not been discharged.

Thus, where the accused is able to establish that due to incessant rain the paddy supplied to him by the Government for milling it into rice was damaged resulting in short delivery of rice, then there is no 'mens rea' on the part of the accused and hence an inference regarding dishonesty of the accused will not be justified. ——S. 405 — Where abetment was a form of abetment by conspiracy as set forth in Clause (2) of Section 107, any charge of conspiracy is not established merely by proof of association together nor by mere suspicion of guilt. Where the record is itself not capable of sustaining a convic-

A gave to B certain sum of money to pay C who resided at another town. On arrival in that town with the money, B put up with D. After some time both B and D went to C's shop and told C that, when they were going to C, the coolie carrying the bag disappeared with the bag. Some money was recovered in two bags from an unoccupied house belonging to D and some money on B's person. It was found that B and D were old acquaintances, that no row was made by B and D on alleged disappearance of the coolie and that the amount found on B's person made up the shortage in the amount found in the bags:

Held, that B was rightly convicted of an offence under Section 406, Penal Code;

Held, further that these facts clearly led to an inference as to D's knowledge about the disposal of money and when he had kept quiet both at C's shop and at police station, he had assisted B and thus abetted the offence under Section 406, Penal Code. 51 Cri LJ 783: AIR 1950 Kutch 37 (38, 40) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 9).

It is true that normally mere retention is not such a circumstance from which there can be an inference that there has been misappropriation. Where a transport company with which the accused persons were associated was appointed the carriers of building materials for the Construction Division for the whole year 1953-54 and thereafter they were entrusted with a delivery order in respect of 100 tons of cement in their capacity as such carrying contractors, and criminal breach of trust was alleged to have been committed by them in respect of a part of these 100 tons of cement after they were entrusted with dominion over the same in the way of their business as an agent of a department of the State Government:

Held, that it was a prima facie case under Section 409, Penal Code and not under Sec. 407, Penal Code and so the case would be triable by the Special Court set up under Section 2 of the West Bengal Criminal Law Amendment (Special Courts) Act, (1949). 1957 Cri LJ 124 (Cal).

■ ——Ss. 408 and 409 — Applicability — Agent and servant — Distinction — (Contract Act (1872), Section 182 — Partnership Act (1932), Section 18).

The substance of the charge against the appellant was that as the promoter of a Society he lawfully received the amounts paid by three persons but that after its incorporation, when he failed on 22-4-1949 to hand over those amounts to the Treasurer and to include their names as share-holders of the minutes book, he committed offences under Sections 409 and 477-A. It was contended that the true status of the appellant was that of a servant and not of an agent, and that he should have been charged not under Section 409, but under Section 408.

Held, that having regard to the nature of the duties of the appellant as the Secretary of the Society his status was that of an agent and not servant. Moreover, whether the appellant should be charged under Section 408, or Section 409 was of no importance in the present case, as the sentence imposed on him under Section 409, viz., four years rigorous imprisonment could be maintained even under Section 408, Chandi Prasad Singh v. Entrustment of property.

——Ss. 408, 403 and 417 — Applicability — "Entrusted" — Money obtained by cheating on four occasions — Charge of criminal breach of trust — Conviction for cheating or misappropriation — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Sections 234, 236 and 237).

The accused was a cashier in a mill. He had to prepare the debit vouchers on the authority of which the managing agent drew money from the bank. It was his duty to disburse the wages of labourers. He, taking advantage of the system of payment of fornightly wages to badli workers drew money as payable to them twice over four months and after paying one set of wages, retained other to himself.

Held, that by placing debit vouchers and other papers before the managing agent for purpose of drawing cheques including wages already paid he had impliedly made a false representation and in inducing the managing agent to draw the cheques had cheated him. The amount so obtained by him could not therefore be said to have been "entrusted" to him. Hence he could not be convicted for the offence under Section 408, Penal Code. AIR 1936 Mad 353 (FB), Rel. on. Although under Sections 236 and 237, Cr. P. Code he could be convicted of the offence of cheating, it was not possible in this case to do that because the cheating was on four different occasions and under Section 234 of that Code more than three offences of the same kind could not be tried together. Still as the money drawn was not intended for the personal use of the accused but in not returning the second set of wages drawn in excess he had misappropriated the amount and was therefore liable for conviction under Section 403, Penal Code. 70 Mad LW 857: 1957 Mad WN 424: (1957) Mad LJ (Cr) 408: 1957 Cr LJ 1284 (2): AIR 1957 Mad 722 (723) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 7).

——S. 408 — Essentials — Failure to account for moneys entrusted — Offence.

The mere failure of accounting for the moneys entrusted to him may not be sufficient to hold the accused guilty of criminal breach of trust. That is only an indication of a piece of evidence evidencing the dishonest intention and must be considered along with the other facts of the case.

Held, on a consideration of the evidence, that prosecution had failed to prove guilt of accused. 1957 Cri LJ 899: 23 Cut LT 352: ILR (1957) Cut 368: AIR 1957 Orissa 165 (168) (Pt B) (Pr 11) (DB).

Where it is proved that the Secretary of a Co-operative Society has converted the money of the Society in his hands to his own use or expended it for purposes other than the purposes of the society, he would be guilty of criminal breach of trust, for such conversion or expenditure must necessarily be dishonest. 1957 Ker LT 834: (1957) Mad LJ (Cr) 782: 1958 Cri LJ 518: AIR 1958 Ker 103 (104) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 408 — Retention of money realised by accused — Inference of dishonest misappropriation — Benefit of doubt to accused.

Although under certain circumstances retention of money realised by the accused while he was in a fiduciary position may give rise to an inference of dishonest misappropriation this cannot be rigidly applied in every case irrespective of the special circumstances obtaining in that particular case. After all, it is a rule of evidence and not a rigid rule of law and case has to be taken in its application. AIR 1954 Madh B 21 and AIR 1930 Pat 209, Rel. on.

Even if there existed some room for doubt, in the absence of any attempt on the part of the complainant to call for an explanation from the accused for such retention and on account of failure on the part of the Magistrate to mention facts in the charge importing dishonest misappropriation, the accused is entitled to its benefit. Madh BLR 1956 (Cri) 349: 1956 MBLJ (HCR) 1497.

For an offence under Section 409, Penal Code, the first essential ingredient to be proved is that the property was entrusted. When Section 405 which defines "criminal breach of trust" speaks of a person being in any manner entrusted with property, it does not contemplate the creation of a trust with all the technicalities of the law of trust. It contemplates the creation of a relationship whereby the owner of property makes it over to another person to be retained by him until a certain contingency arises or to be disposed of by him on the happening of a certain event. The person who transfers possession of the property to the second party still remains the legal owner of the property and the person in whose favour possession is so transferred has only the custody of the property to be kept or disposed of by him for the benefit of the other party, the person so put in possession only obtaining a special interest by way of a claim for money advanced or spent upon the safe keeping of the thing or such other incidental expenses as may have been incurred by him.

Where securities have been delivered with a view to cover the repayment of any overdraft by the pledgor Bank to the pledgee Bank and it is agreed that they are to be disposed on the arising of a stipulated contingency only, then by the very fact of the delivery of the securities to the bailee the latter becomes a trustee in terms of the contract, not for all purposes, but only for the limited purpose indicated by the agreement between the parties. The pledgor in such a case only transfers his possession of the property to the pledgee who has a special interest in the property of enforcing his charge for payment of an overdraft, if any, whereas the property continues to be owned by the pledgor. If in such a case there is no overdraft, the pledgor Bank can ask for a return of the securities at any time. And the securities having continued to be the property of the pledgor Bank the pledgee Bank, or its Managing Director, has no right to deal with them. In such a case the Managing Director, holding a power of attorney on behalf of the pledgee Bank, can be said either to have been entrusted with the property in a derivative sense or to have dominion over the securities as a banker; and thus in either case, the first essential condition for the application of Section 409, Penal Code, is fulfilled. The accused realised a sum of Rs. 596-14-0 from certain cultivators on account of canal dues in his capacity as canal amin and deposited only a sum of Rs. 398-4-6 out of it in the Government treasury. The excess sum of Rs. 198-9-6 was not deposited in the treasury, though it was realised from the cultivators. The sum of Rs. 596-14-0 realised by the accused was not really due from those cultivators as canal dues. The sum due was Rs. 398-4-6 and that was the sum which, after realisation was deposited by the applicant in the Government treasury. The amount of Rs. 198-9-6 which was misappropriated by the applicant, had been realised by him from the cultivators representing that it was due from them as canal dues, though this was not correct.

Held, that so far as the balance of Rs. 198-9-6 was concerned, that amount was never due to the Government. At the same time, he could not become the trustee of this money on behalf of the cultivators from whom he realised this money. Hence, the only offence, which, on these facts, the applicant could be held liable for, was the offence of cheating and obtaining delivery of property by commission of that offence which would be punishable under Section 420, Penal Code. The appropriate provision of law is only Section 420, Penal Code and Section 409, could not apply at all. ——S. 409 — Property — Intention to destroy and to abandon — Actual abandonment and destruction — Distinction.

If an article is abandoned, it becomes res nullius, and there can be no theft or breach of trust. But a very clear distinction must be drawn between an intention to destroy and to abandon and an actual destruction and abandonment. The very fact that the owner of the property intends to destroy or abandon that property and hands it over to some person to effect those purposes is a clear indication that he still maintains his rights as the owner of that property and that those rights subsist until the abandonment or destruction is completed. As long as the destruction or abandonment is not fulfilled and as long as it is still in the hands of the owner to countermand such destruction or abandonment the property is still the property of the owner and the taking it out of his possession is theft, and improper use of it is breach of trust. 52 Cri LJ 36: 1951 Nag LJ 102: ILR (1950) Nag 957: AIR 1951 Nag 150 (153) (Pt A) (Prs 28, 29) (DB).

——S. 409 — Railway disposing of goods consigned — Disposal by destruction — Possession, how long continues.

A railway in disposing of the goods consigned can part not only with possession but also with ownership. But in the case of disposal by destruction there can be no fresh act of pretension till the reproduction of the animus possidendi is rendered impossible or there exists a contrary animus not to possess the thing. Possession thus continues so long as it is not negatived by a new act of will opposed to that under which possession of the thing originally continued (ita nulla amittatur, nisi in qua, utrumque in contrarium actum est). Once, of course, possession and ownership are destroyed and the goods go into the possession and ownership of another, there is no possibility of an animus revertendi. Till possession and ownership are so definitely destroyed, there would be theft, conversion, trover, trespass and misappropriation of the goods, as the case may be. 52 Cri LJ 36: 1951 Nag LJ 102: ILR (1950) Nag 957: AIR 1951 Nag 150 (154) (Pt B) (Pr 33) (DB).

——S. 409 — Criminal breach of trust — Gist of offence — Public servant should be required or authorised to receive property.

The gist of the offence under Section 409 is that the accused, though he might be a public servant, must be shown to have been either required or authorised to receive the property in respect of which the criminal breach of trust is alleged. If he is not so required or authorised, then even though he may have received it, he would be acting as a mere volunteer and will not be taken as having been entrusted with the property in his capacity of a public servant. ——S. 409 — Cochin Penal Code, Section 389 — Applicability — Receiver of estate appointed by Court — Duty of — Failure to bring into account all money received by him — Omission to show price actually charged for goods or produce of estate — Offence.

A receiver appointed by a Court in respect of a property stands in a fiduciary relationship to the Court which appointed him and to the estate of which he is the receiver; and it is therefore, incumbent on him to enter any income which he receives in respect of the property in his charge, in his account, by whatever name it is called, such as premium, though it may be an amount over and above what is received as legitimately can be demanded under the law. If he fails to do so, he is clearly liable for criminal breach of trust as defined in Section 385 of the Cochin Penal Code (Section 405, I. P. Code). There being a legal obligation on the receiver to conform to certain rules and regulations, if he violates them and fails to bring into account the amount actually received by him from persons to whom he sells the produce or goods of the estate, it must be that he dishonestly used or disposed of the property in violation of the direction of law prescribing the mode in which the trust has to be executed by him and it must be held that he is guilty of the offence under Section 385 and liable to conviction under Section 389, Cochin Penal Code. 1951 KLT 503: 1952 Cr LJ 766: ILR (1951) Trav-Co 765: AIR 1952 Trav-Co 128 (131) (Pt A) (Pr 12) (DB).

The Court never looks with favour upon the suggestion that there is an implied repeal and the intention of the Court will always be against the repeal of an earlier statute when the Legislature has not expressly done so. Corruption Act was passed, and August, 1952, when the amendment was made, Section 409, as it related to public servants, cannot be deemed to have been repealed by implication. ——S. 409 — Applicability — Offence covered by Section 409 and Section 5 (1) (c), Prevention of Corruption Act — Prosecution under Section 409 — Maintainability.

Where the act is an offence under two different enactments, Section 26, General Clauses Act, gives option to the prosecutor to prosecute either under one or the other, and it is not open for the Court to say that the prosecution must be under that enactment which requires sanction. What is implicit in view of Section 26 is made clear by Section 5 (4) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. It is, therefore, open to the prosecutor to prosecute a public servant under Section 409 without sanction from the State, and the Court cannot insist that the prosecution must be under Section 5 (1) (c), Prevention of Corruption Act with the sanction of the State. ——S. 409 — Goods sent by railway found to be rotten — Order for destruction — Goods clerks selling goods privately — Offence under section, if committed.

Where the owner orders the destruction of the goods, abandoning at the same time his original animus to possess, possession and ownership come to an end by express abandonment. But a bailee is not in the same position as the owner. Thus, where goods sent by railway are found to be rotten the railway can order destruction of the goods, but possession of railway continues till destruction is carried out as there is no general abandonment. Different consequences arise on whether the goods are sold or destroyed; and the railway must, therefore, be deemed to continue in possession till one or the other action was carried out. They cannot, therefore, abandon the goods without the particular end being achieved.

A wagon of potatoes was unloaded at certain railway station. The potatoes were examined by doctor and were declared by him to be offensive and unfit for human consumption. The station master thereupon ordered the potatoes to be destroyed. The accused, who were two goods clerks and who had charge and custody of the potatoes sold them privately instead of destroying them:

Held, that the ownership of the owner of the goods was not destroyed and that the goods were still in the possession of the railway. Thus, both possession and ownership were outstanding in the consignor and the railway taken together. ——Ss. 409 and 21, Cl. 4 — Criminal breach of trust by public servant — Receiver in insolvency — Receipt of sale proceeds of insolvent's property — Onus of proof — Failure to give amount while handing over charge to his successor — Accused held guilty.

In view of the definition of 'public servant' in Clause 4 of Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code, a Receiver in insolvency is a public servant.

In the case of a servant charged with misappropriating the property of his master, the elements of criminal offence will be established if the prosecution proves that the servant received the property, that he was under a duty to account to his master and had not done so. If these facts are within the knowledge of the accused, then he has to prove them; of course the prosecution has to establish a prima facie case in the first instance; it is enough to establish facts which give rise to a suspicion and then by reason of Sec. 106 of the Evidence Act to throw the onus on him to prove his innocence. AIR 1959 SC 1390, Rel. on.

The accused, a receiver in insolvency had received a sum of Rs. 1500 out of the sale of the insolvent's property but had not entered the the same in the General Cash Book as required by Rule 21, Part X, Chap. 1 of General Rules and Circular Orders of the Orissa High Court (Civil) Vol. 1. ——S. 409 — Applicability — Deposit made with accused in their capacity as bankers — Dishonest misappropriation or conversion — Offence.

Where the deposits which the depositors make with the accused in the capacity of the latter as bankers, the accused cannot be deemed to have been entrusted with the money of the depositors; instead they remain merely their debtors. Since entrustment is the essence of an offence under Section 409 they cannot be said to have committed criminal breach of trust by dishonestly misappropriating or converting to their own use the deposited amounts. 1960 All LJ 33: 1960 Cri LJ 188: 1960 All WR (HC) 67: 1960 All Cr R 84: AIR 1960 All 103 (112) (Pt H) (Pr 38) (DB).

——S. 409 — Construction — "Entrustment" — Applicability to deposit with a banker.

An offence under Section 409, I. P. Code, "presupposes an entrustment". But in the case of a deposit with a banker, it becomes the money of the bank and he is only under a contractual obligation to pay the sum deposited when demanded. 1951 All WR (HC) 85: 1950 All LJ 808.

——S. 409 — Banker — Persons working in bank are not bankers.

Persons working in a bank are not bankers. Therefore, Section 409 has no application in respect of an alleged criminal breach of trust by such persons. (1950) 20 Comp Cas 220: 51 Cri LJ 388: AIR 1950 Cal 57 (58) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

——Ss. 409 and 405 — Entrustment — Deposit in bank — There is no entrustment — Relationship between bank and customer is that of creditor and debtor.

Section 409 presupposes entrustment. When a person opens a current account in a bank, there is no question of entrustment. The relationship between the bank and the customer is one of creditor and debtor. Hence, there can be no case against a bank or its officers for committing an offence under Section 409 in respect of the money deposited by a customer: AIR 1941 Cal 713 and AIR 1947 PC 44, Rel. on. (1950) 20 Comp Cas 220: 51 Cri LJ 388: AIR 1950 Cal 57 (58) (Pt C) (Pr 5).

●——S. 409 — 'In the way of his business as agent' — Meaning of — Expression not restricted to persons who carry on profession of agency — Requirements of section satisfied if person is entrusted with property in course of his duties as agent.

What Section 409 requires is that the person alleged to have committed criminal breach of trust with respect to any property be entrusted with that property or with dominion over that property in the way of his business as an agent. The expression 'in the way of his business' means that the property is entrusted to him in the ordinary course of his duty. The requirements of this section would be satisfied if the person be an agent of another and that other person entrusts him with property or with any dominion over that property in the course of his duties as an agent. A person may be an agent of another for some purpose and if he is entrusted with property not in connection with that purpose but for another purpose, that entrustment will not be entrustment for the purposes of Section 409 if any breach of trust is committed by the person. The criminal breach of trust by an agent would be a graver offence only when he is entrusted with property not only in his capacity as an agent but also in connection with his duties as an agent. It is not correct to say that the word 'agent' in Section 409 refers to a 'professional agent, i.e., a person who carried on the profession of agency. 1953 AC 407 and (1885) 16 QBD 487 and 1935 Mad WN 649, Distinguished. 9. Evidence and proof.

■ ——S. 409 — Applicability — Failure to account for property entrusted — Dishonest misappropriation or conversion — Inference.

To establish a charge of criminal breach of trust, the prosecution is not obliged to prove the precise mode of conversion, misappropriation or misapplication by the accused of the property entrusted to him or over which he has dominion. The principle ingredient of the offence being dishonest misappropriation or conversion which may not ordinarily be a matter of direct proof, entrustment of property and failure, in breach of an obligation, to account for the property entrusted, if proved, may in the light of other circumstances, justifiably lead to an inference of dishonest misappropriation or conversion. Conviction of a person for the offence of criminal breach of trust may not, in all cases, be founded merely on his failure to account for the property entrusted to him, or over which he has dominion, even when a duty to account is imposed upon him, but where he is unable to account or renders an explanation for his failure to account which is untrue, an inference of misappropriation with dishonest intent may readily be made. ——S. 409 — Evidence — "Entrustment".

R. K. a cashier employed at a Government sub-treasury, confessed to the sub-treasury officer who was checking the cash that he had misappropriated Government money; he was taken to the Treasurer to whom he admitted having embezzled a sum of Rs. 84,000 during the previous six years in the presence of the Extra Additional Commissioner. He made a confession two days later (2-4-1948) before a Magistrate voluntarily to the same effect. But the confession states that there was no misappropriation or embezzlement between 1945 and May, 1947. It was found the total deficit of cash was Rs. 84,215 on 1-4-48. R. K. was then charged for an offence under Section 409, selecting the period August, 1946 to March, 1947 as the basis far removed from the detection of the offence and also not covered by the confession of the accused. He was convicted of the offence and he appealed.

Held: Though the Tahsildar and the Treasurer were ultimately responsible for the cash and the cashier had only the cash-book, yet it cannot be denied that he was entrusted with cash when he handled the cash day to day and was responsible for cash in the sub-treasury.

The overwriting and other similar irregularities in entries of the cash book, against the rules made by the Government, may be highly suspicious; but particular entries so suspected may not relate to any embezzlement. Mere suspicion cannot take the place of proof of the offence. The confessions of the accused having committed misappropriation during a period of six years but not including the period covered by the charge in the case cannot be used as the basis for conviction though they may furnish evidence as admissions of the fact, that he knew there was a shortage of cash. They do not admit in terms the offence charged and cannot be relied upon. (AIR 1939 PC 47; AIR 1945 Bom 152, Rel. on). AIR 1961 Ajmer 15 (16) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

——S. 409 — Criminal breach of trust — Evidence and proof — Entrustment as well as dishonest misappropriation proved — Offence is complete.

For conviction under Section 409 what the prosecution has to prove is not only entrustment but also dishonest misappropriation. It is not necessary for prosecution to prove in what manner the accused has dealt with or appropriated the goods. The question is one of intention and not direct proof.

The articles belonging to the master were entrusted for sale to the accused, who was his servant, and some of the articles were found missing while the bills showed that they had been sold by the accused. There was no accounting of the missing articles nor was proof adduced as to how the accused paid off the amount admittedly collected by him under the sales evidenced by the bills.

——S. 409 — Evidence — Circumstantial evidence.

An assistant parcel clerk was charged under Section 409, I. P. Code. It was alleged that he was in charge of V. P. Parcels His duty was to deliver the parcels to the addressees, take money, and send the money by money order to the senders of the parcels. If the parcels were not delivered to the addressees he had to enter them in the registers as 're-entered on'. The undelivered parcels were supposed to be checked daily by supervisor. It was alleged that the accused delivered some V. P. Parcels to the addressees, took money and gave receipts, but the delivery was not entered in the registers. On the contrary they were entered as 're-entered on', meaning that they were not delivered. After some days, the accused went on sick leave. Accused was employed only two months back. The misappropriation of parcels was discovered when the accused was on leave. His uncle made good the amount by paying it off. The accused was charged under Section 409. None of the addressees could tell it was the accused who delivered the parcels to them. It was found that some times the parcel clerk also used to make the delivery of the V. P. Parcels, though it was the duty of the assistant parcel clerk to do it. The defence of the accused was that, he was a new man, that he had to do the work of a sorting clerk also, that he did not deliver the parcels, that he entered them as undelivered, because he was told to do this and that as he was a new man he had to follow the instructions.

Held, that in the absence of any direct evidence that it was the accused who delivered the parcels and in the face of evidence that the official practice was not always followed, the guilt of the accused was not brought home to him, beyond reasonable doubt. 1954 Madh BLR (Cr) 47: 1954 Cri LJ 1178: Madh BLJ (1954) HCR 558: AIR 1954 Madh Bha 135 (137, 138) (Prs 24, 25).

——Ss. 409 and 477-A — Misappropriation by servant of the goods of his master — Nature and burden of proof.

It is not necessary or possible in every case to prove in what precise manner the accused person has dealt with or misappropriated the goods of his master. The question is one of intention and not a matter of direct proof but giving a false account of what he has done with the goods received by him may be treated as a strong circumstance against him. In the case of a servant charged with misappropriating the goods of his master the elements of criminal offence of misappropriation will be established if the prosecution proves that the servant received the goods, that he was under a duty to account to his master and had not done so. If the failure to account was due to an accidental loss then the facts being within the servant's knowledge it is for him to explain the loss. It is not the law of this country that the prosecution has to eliminate all possible defences or circumstances which may exonerate him. If these facts are within the knowledge of the accused then he has to prove them. Of course the prosecution has to establish a prima facie case in the first instance. It is not enough to establish facts which give rise to a suspicion and then by reason of Section 106 of the Evidence Act to throw the onus on him to prove his innocence. (1964) Mad LJ (Cr) 719: 1965 Mad WN 154: 78 Mad LW 110: 1965 (2) Cri LJ 826 (828, 829) (Prs 6, 7) (Mad).

——S. 409 — Criminal breach of trust by Public servant — Misappropriation of money — What prosecution has to prove — Proof of manner in which money was misappropriated is not necessary — Burden of proof — Evidence Act (1872), Section 106.

The well-settled position in law on criminal breach of trust is that it is not necessary or possible in every case to prove in what precise manner the accused person has dealt with or misappropriated the property entrusted to him. The question is one of intention and not a matter of direct proof but giving a false account of what he has done with the property received by him may be treated as strong circumstance against the accused person. In the case of a servant charged with misappropriation of monies of his master, the elements of criminal offence of misappropriation will be established if the prosecution proves that the servant received the monies, that he was under a duty to account to his master and had not done so. If the failure to account was due to an accidental loss, then the facts being within the servant's knowledge, it is for him to explain the loss. It is not the law of the country that the prosecution has to eliminate all possible defences or circumstances which may exonerate the accused; if these facts are within the knowledge of the accused then he has to prove them; of course the prosecution has to establish prima facie case in the first instance; it is enough to establish facts which give rise to a suspicion and then by reason of Section 106 of the Evidence Act to throw the onus on the accused to prove his innocence. If under the law it is not necessary or possible for the prosecution to prove the manner in which the monies had been misappropriated, then the failure of the prosecution to prove facts as set out to prove the manner of misappropriation or the identity of the goods would be of little relevance. ——S. 409 — Intention — Burden of proof.

Dishonest intention cannot be proved directly and must be inferred from the circumstances. Though the failure to comply with the Rules regarding custody and disbursement of public funds may not suffice to prove such dishonest intention, yet a fairly educated Sarpanch who has been maintaining the Cash Book and other Registers properly, cannot reasonably be expected to have advanced a large sum of money to various persons without obtaining proper receipts as required by the Gram Panchayat Rules. This has a direct bearing on the question of belief or disbelief of the defence story. If the accused failed to account for the sum at the appropriate time and put forward, at a belated stage, a plea which was a mere pretence, the Courts are justified in holding that he dishonestly misappropriated the money, even though there was no direct evidence of conversion of the same to his own use. 26 Cut LT 210: ILR (1960) Cut 143.

——Ss. 409, 405 and 477-A — Applicability — 'Misappropriation' — Evidence — Alteration of document.

For a conviction under Section 409, not only entrustment but also dishonest misappropriation has to be made out.

Where the accused, a money order issue clerk at post office was prosecuted for misappropriation of moneys handed over to him for remittance, and as a proof of misappropriation, money order issue journal was tendered, showing alteration made in the books, and it was in evidence that the journal was not in the custody of the accused till they were seized, but it was not proved that the alterations were made in the handwriting of the accused, for want of originals or the certified copies thereof.

Held, that it could not be said that the accused was proved to have misappropriated the sum and that therefore, the prosecution though it succeeded in proving entrustment, failed to bring home the guilt under Section 409 to the accused. Held, further, that the accused could not also be convicted under Section 477-A, for want of proof that the alterations were in his handwriting. 23 Cut LT 410: 1957 Cri LJ 1431: AIR 1957 Orissa 268 (270, 271) (Pt B) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

——S. 409 — Evidence and proof — Retention of money when amounts to dishonest misappropriation.

After the prosecution discharges the burden of proving entrustment, it is not necessary for it to prove in what manner the money alleged to have been misappropriated was spent by the accused. If it is shown that money entrusted to the accused for a particular purpose was not returned by him in accordance with his duty, it lies on him to prove his defence. It may well be that the retention may be for a short period and this would be consistent with his innocence.

But it cannot be said that the retention can under no circumstances amount to dishonest misappropriation unless the prosecution proves active dishonest conversion. The question is one of fact in each case and unexplained retention of money for a long time might well be sufficient to raise the inference of guilt. 9 Sau LR 15: 1955 Cri LJ 1528: AIR 1955 Sau 100 (102) (Pt C) (Pr 7) (DB).

——S. 409 — Applicability — Dishonest misappropriation and falsification of accounts by public servant — Complainant entrusting amount to accused, an employee of post office for sending money order — Accused not despatching money order and also omitting to enter amount in account books and registers — In the counter foil of the receipt issued for the amount, accused entering particulars of earlier money order — Accused held had dishonestly misappropriated the amount entrusted to him and falsified the accounts. In order to prove that property is stolen property, it is not necessary that the stolen property should have been proved to have been in possession of a particular person and in a particular locality before it was stolen. It is enough that possession of property has been transferred by theft, or by extortion or by robbery or by criminal misappropriation. 1965 BLJR 209: 1965 (2) Cri LJ 570 (571) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (Patna) (DB).

8. Possession must be exclusive.
9. Identification of stolen property.
10. Pointing out or production of property.
11. Evidence and proof.
12. Conviction and sentence.
13. Practice and procedure.

1. Scope and applicability.

——S. 411 — Essentials to be proved.

It is the duty of the prosecution in order to bring home the guilt of a person under S. 411, I. P. Code, to prove, (1) that the stolen property was in the possession of the accused, (2) that some person other than the accused had possession of the property before the accused got possession of it, and (3) that the accused had knowledge that the property was stolen property. Trimbak v. State of Madhya Pradesh. 1954 Cri LJ 335: AIR 1954 SC 39 (40) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

——S. 411 — Essential ingredients — Presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a), Evidence Act — Applicability and scope of.

It is not necessary in every cases for the prosecution in order to secure a conviction under S. 411, I. P. Code to prove by positive evidence in addition to the factum of theft and the recent recovery of property from the possession of the accused, that the property was in possession of someone else before it came into the possession of the accused.

In every case under S. 411, I. P. Code two facts, viz., (1) that a theft was committed and certain articles were stolen, and (2) that the stolen articles were recovered from the possession of the accused, have to be established by the direct evidence. They cannot be presumed. If these two facts are established and the recovery from the possession of the accused is a recent one, it will be open to the Court to presume under Illustration (a) to S. 114, Evidence Act that the accused is either the theft or a receiver of stolen property. The presumption, is however, a discretionary one and may not be available at all in certain case, e.g., where in the circumstances of the case the recovery cannot be held to have been made soon after the theft, in a case in which the presumption is available all the essential ingredients of the offences including possession of someone else at an earlier stage will be presumed and it will be for accused to rebut the presumption, and to offer a reasonable explanation of the possession of the articles. The accused cannot get any advantage of the omission of the prosecution to lead direct evidence in respect of it. 1959 All LJ 403: 1959 All WR (HC) 361: 1959 All Cr R 288: 1959 Cri LJ 1271: ILR (1959) 1 All 213: AIR 1959 All 718 (720) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 11) (DB).

——S. 411 — Scope.

Accused can be said to have committed offence, under section in respect of only the property recovered from him. In a case under the section Court is not concerned with rest of property stolen and which has not been recovered from the accused. 1953 All LJ 368: 1953 All WR (HC) 351: 1953 Cri LJ 1699: AIR 1953 All 752 (752) (Pt B) (Pr 2).

——Ss. 411, 414, 403 — Applicability — Person finding stray animal — Possession — Offence — Subsequent sale of same — Nature of offence.

Where the person who took possession of a stray animal sold the same at a public fair and he was charged under Ss. 379 and 414 of the Penal Code and convicted in respect of the charge under the latter section alone and on the case coming up before a Judge of the High Court doubting the correctness of the conviction the latter referred it to a Bench in the following terms. "If it is found that a person sells a property knowing it to be stolen property, can he be convicted for an offence punishable under S. 414, I. P. Code in the absence of any finding about the receipt of that property by such a person".

Held, on such reference,

On the fact, no offence of theft had been committed by the accused in taking possession of the stray animal. Nor had the accused received any stolen property. But if he converts it to his own use he is guilty of criminal misappropriation under S. 403, Penal Code.

When the owner of a property is deprived of his property without his consent it may be by criminal misappropriation. In such a case the property in the hands of the person who so deprived him is not stolen property. It is only when he passes on the same to another that other becomes the receiver of stolen property by vitrue of S. 410 of the Penal Code.

Section 414 aims at those persons who are not in possession of stolen property themselves and help others in possession to dispose of the same. Neither the thief nor the receiver of stolen property can come under S. 414. The accused disposed of the misappropriated property himself. He is not guilty of the offence under S. 414. The reference was answered in the negative. 1952 Cri LJ 904: AIR 1952 All 481 (484, 485) (Pt E) (Prs 19, 20).

——S. 411 — Inquiry if article received was obtained by theft or honestly — Necessity of.

Section 411 does not require that the person receiving the article which is found later on to be a stolen article must make inquiries at the time of receiving it whether it was obtained by theft or honestly. 1950 All LJ 344: 51 Cr LJ 1331:

1950 All WR (HC) 453: 1950 All Cri Cas 142: AIR 1950 All 497 (498) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

——S. 411 — Ingredients — Duty of prosecution.

A conviction under Section 411 is possible only if the accused received stolen property with the requisite intention. It is therefore, the duty of the prosecution in order to bring home the guilt of a person under S. 411, I. P. Code, to prove (1) that the stolen property was in the possession of the accused; (2) that some person other than the accused got possession of it; and (3) that the accused had knowledge that the property was stolen property. AIR 1954 SC 39; 1954 Cri LJ 335, Rel. on. 1957 Cri LJ 349: AIR 1957 Assam 35 (38) (Pt B) (Pr 15) (DB).

——S. 411 — Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Section 124, Bombay Police Act (22 of 1951) — Validity — Section 124 does not make discrimination between accused and accused and is valid.

An offence under S. 124 Bombay Police Act is an offence of a minor character while an offence under S. 411, Penal Code is of a serious nature. The facts which are required to be proved under S. 124 are not the self-same facts which are required to be proved under S. 411 there is a section giving the police a discretion either to charge under S. 124 or S. 411. See Constitution of India, Art. 14. 60 Bom LR 403: ILR (1958) Bom 883: 1960 Cri LJ 1186: AIR 1960 Bom 377 (DB).

——S. 411 — Essentials — What prosecution has to prove.

It is the duty of the prosecution in order to establish the charge under S. 411, to prove (1) that the stolen property was in possession of the accused, (2) that some person other than the accused had possession of the property before the accused got possession of it, and (3) that the accused has knowledge that the property was stolen property. 1954 Cri LJ 1713: AIR 1954 Manipur 13 (17) (Pt F) (Pr 12).

——S. 411 — Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illus. (a) — Mere recovery of stolen property not enough to attract S. 411.

Mere recovery of stolen property is not enough to make out a case under S. 411 of the Penal Code. The prosecution has to establish that it was stolen property and the accused persons dishonestly retained the same knowing or having reason to believe the same to be stolen property. Unless it is proved to be stolen property no question of drawing a presumption under S. 114. Illus. (a) of the Evidence Act would arise. 1965 (2) Cri LJ 54: 31 Cut LT 941: (1965) 7 OJD 311: ILR (1964) Cut 795: AIR 1965 Orissa 114 (118) (Pt C) (Pr 7).

——S. 411 — Essence of offence.

It is not inconceivable that although thefts may have been committed on different occasions the thief may pass on the stolen property to the receiver at one time. The fact of receiving in such a case would be one act, although the stolen property relates to a number of thefts and a number of stolen articles. Therefore, it is not correct to say that the offence under S. 411 is the offence of receiving a particular article of stolen property or property stolen in a particular theft. ILR (1958) Punj 1141: 61 Pun LR 195: 1959 Cri LJ 762: AIR 1959 Punj 275 (277) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

——S. 411 — Applicability — Evidence Act, Section 114, Illustration (a) — Illustrations are not exhaustive of all the presumptions— Evidence of accused's possession of stolen property soon after theft — Property recovered more than four years after theft — Accused held knew that the property was stolen property — Conviction under S. 411 held proper. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 114. 1961 (1) Cri LJ 310: AIR 1961 Raj 35.

——S. 411 — Scope — Held on the facts of this case that in the nature of the evidence in this case it could not be said that any of the elements of S. 411, Penal Code had been clearly and conclusively brought home to the second accused. The best that could be ever said in favour of the prosecution evidence was that it created a suspicion that the first accused who had come into possession of the money stolen might have rendered financial help to the second accused. Such a suspicion however strong would not be sufficient to warrant a conviction of the second accused under S. 411. In these circumstances it would be unjustified and unwarranted to invoke an aid of S. 237, Cr. P. Code and to enter a conviction against the second accused under S. 411, Penal Code. See Criminal P. C (1898), S. 233. AIR 1955 NUC (Trav-Co) 1494 (DB).

——Ss. 411 and 412 — Applicability — Accused found to be in possession of property stolen in dacoity — Offence — Where the only evidence against the accused was that ornaments stolen in dacoity were recovered from the house of the accused and there was no evidence that the accused was seen near the place of dacoity or of joining the gang; Held, that it was safe to convict the accused neither under Section 395 nor under S. 412 but only under Section 411. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illus (a). 1959 Cri LJ 496: AIR 1959 Madh Pra 125.

——S. 411 — Applicability — Property looted in dacoity — Essentials to be proved — Recovery of articles of common use — Effect — S. 412.

Where all the articles that are recovered from the accused are ordinary ornaments, the recovery of such common things is not enough to sustain a charge under Section 411, I. P. C. For a conviction under Section 411, I. P. Code the prosecution has not only to prove that the stolen property was found in the possession of the accused, but it has further to prove that the accused knew and has reason to believe that the property was stolen. Where the property is obtained in the commission of a dacoity, it cannot be called stolen property and as such the conviction should be under Section 412, I. P. C. Even under Section 412, I. P. C. the ingredients of the offence are the same as those under Section 411, namely, that the accused should have known or should have reason to believe that the property which he acquired, belonged to the gang of the dacoits. In the absence of any proof of such knowledge it is difficult to convict the accused either under Section 411 or 412. 1958 Jab LJ 264.

3. Dishonestly receives or retains.

——Ss. 411, 414 — Scope — Assists, meaning of — Person selling property knowing it to be stolen — Absence of finding as to receipt of such property — Person is not guilty either under Section 414 or S. 411. See Penal Code (1860), S. 414. 1952 Cri LJ 433: AIR 1952 All 481.

——S. 411 — Evidence — "Dishonestly receives and retains" — Inference.

People do not secrete properties far away from the village in unknown places unless they are not in a position to claim them as their own and unless they have been dishonestly got they will not hide the traces of the same. 1953 Mad WN 918: 55 Cri LJ 583: AIR 1954 Mad 433 (435) (Pt C) (Pr 18).

——Ss. 411, 412— "Receives or retains any stolen property" — Interpretation.

Doubtless there is a real distinction between receipt and retention. In some instances receipt of property may be honest, but subsequently when the offender comes to know that the property is stolen property and yet continues in possession of the same, he may be said to retain the same. But in Section 411 and 412, the words "receives" and "retains" occur side by side and the collocation of receipt and retention of stolen property is obviously intended to do away with the necessity of proving the presence of dishonesty at the time of its possession. As both receiving and retaining constitute one offence, the accused is not entitled to claim the nature of his possession specified, and it is sufficient if he is charged for receiving or retaining and evidence is adduced to prove guilty knowledge at some period antecedent to its recovery by the police. ILR (1958) Cut 131: 1958 Cr LJ 657: AIR 1958 Orissa 106 (107) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

——S. 411 — 'Dishonestly receives or retains' — What prosecution must prove.

To be liable under Section 411, it must be proved that the accused either dishonestly received the property or having received it honestly, dishonestly retained it. In both the cases the accused must receive it from another. Consequently, in order to bring a person in possession of any movable property within the mischief of Section 411, the prosecution must in the first instance prove that there was some other person who was in possession of that property and from whom the accused received it. AIR 1954 SC 39, Rel. on. 22 Cut LT 456: ILR (1957) Cut 112.

4. Stolen property.

——Ss. 411, 410 — Evidence — Guilty knowledge — Inference of.

From the bare fact that the accused was residing in the complainant's village his knowledge that the ornaments were stolen property cannot legitimately be concluded. Trimbak v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 1954 Cri LJ 335: AIR 1954 SC 39 (40) (Pt C) (Pr 8).

——Ss. 411, 380 — Property found in possession of accused must be shown to have been property stolen. See Penal Code (1860), S. 380. 1960 Cri LJ 1620: AIR 1960 Madh Pra 395 (DB).

——S. 411 — Applicability — Stolen property — Proceeds of sale of property stolen.

Property into or for which the stolen property has been converted or exchanged is not stolen property. But an ingot of gold or silver obtained by melting gold or silver articles which were stolen does not cease to be stolen property. 1953 Mad WN 918: 55 Cri LJ 583: AIR 1954 Mad 433 (436) (Pt F) (Pr 19).

——Ss. 411, 414 — Property not proved to be stolen for charge under Section 411 — Accused cannot be convicted under Section 414 also — Property must be proved to have been stolen, for Section 414 also. 1965 BLJR 209: 1965 (2) Cri LJ 570 (571) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (Patna) (DB).

5. Knowing or having reason to believe.

——S. 411 — Applicability — Possession of stolen articles — Evidence of, is question of fact — Stolen articles dug out by accused and given to investigating officer by accused — Accused must be presumed to have knowledge that articles which if stolen, were in home — Even if house were in joint possession, other may not be held liable. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 2735.

——S. 411 — Knowing or having reason to believe — Evidence Act (1872), S. 114.

Per Bhargava J. — Where a calf belonging to another person is sold by the accused for an inadequate price only after a day it was stolen from the owner and the accused is unable to give any account as to how he came to be in possession of it, an inference that the accused knew it to be stolen property can be reasonably drawn. 1952 Cri LJ 904: AIR 1952 All 481 (483) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

——S. 411 — Conduct of accused in concealing property at time of its recovery — Evidence Act (1872), S. 8.

The conduct of the person, accused of having purchased a stolen property, in unsucessfully concealing it at the time of recovery is indicative that at that moment he either suspected or believed that the article purchased by him must have been the subject-matter of some offence. But it cannot be regarded as any conclusive evidence of the state of the mind of the accused at the time when he purchased it. This piece of circumstantial evidence does not exclude the possibility that the purchase was innocent and without any guilty knowledge or belief. ILR (1951) 3 Assam 46: AIR 1950 Assam 193 (194) (Pt A) (Pr 7) (DB).

——S. 411 — Word "believe" if equivalent to "suspect" — Purchase of stolen property in presence of other persons.

The word "believe" occurring in S. 411 is much stronger word than "suspect". It involves the necessity of showing that the circumstances were such that a reasonable man must have felt convinced in his mind that the property with which he was dealing must be stolen property. A person who has purchased stolen property openly in the presence of others cannot be said to have purchased it, knowing it to be stolen or having reason to believe that it is stolen. In a case like this it is not sufficient to show that the accused was careless or had reason to suspect that the property was stolen or that he did not make sufficient enquiry to ascertain whether the property had been honestly acquired. ILR (1951) 3 Assam 46: AIR 1950 Assam 193 (194) (Pt B) (Pr 7) (DB).

——S. 411 — Conviction under — It must be shown that accused knew or had reason to believe that property had been stolen.

Where the accused purchases a mare from another then he can be convicted under S. 411 only if it can be found that he knew or had reason to believe that the mare had been stolen. When there is no such allegation against the accused nor is there any finding to that effect, conviction is wholly unsustainable. 51 Cri LJ 509: ILR (1950) 2 Assam 208: AIR 1950 Assam 87 (88) (Prs 4, 5).

——S. 411 — Essentials — Knowledge on part of accused not proved — Effect.

To succeed in a prosecution under Sec. 411, I. P. C. the prosecution must not only prove that the property had been stolen, but they must also establish facts from which the court can properly infer that the person charged with being in possession of stolen property either knew the property to be stolen or had reasonable grounds for believing the same to have been stolen. Unless there is some prima facie evidence as to the knowledge of the accused the latter is entitled to be acquitted, because, merely proving that he was in possession of the stolen property establishes no offence of any kind.

In cases of this kind the accused is called upon to offer an explanation only when there is a prima facie case against him. Whether there is no evidence at all as to his knowledge the accused must be acquitted upon the evidence for the prosecution, without calling upon him to enter upon his defence. 87 Cal LJ 387: 1952 Cri LJ 1298: AIR 1952 Cal 616 (617, 618) (Pt B) (Prs 9, 12).

——Ss. 411 and 379 — Kutch Penal Code Ss. 126 and 145 — Theft and receiving stolen property — Conviction for former, precludes conviction for latter.

When an accused is found to be a participator in the theft there can be on question of his receiving the stolen property. The two offences are distinct, and a person proved to have committed theft cannot be convicted for receiving stolen property. AIR 1950 Kutch 88 (88) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

——S. 411 — Conviction — Basis of — Reasonable belief that property was stolen — Proof of.

Section 411, I. P. Code, does not apply to a case where the accused suspects the property to be stolen property He must have reasons to believe when he received the property that it was stolen property. The word "believe" is a very much stronger word than "suspect" and it involves the necessity of showing that the circumstances were such that a reasonable man must have felt convinced in his mind that the property with which he was dealing must be stolen property. It is not sufficient to show that the accused was careless, or that he had reason to suspect that the property was stolen, or that he did not make sufficient enquiry to ascertain whether it had been honestly acquired. 52 Cri LJ 646: AIR 1951 Raj 89 (92) (Pt B) (Pr 12) (DB).

6. Presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act.

——S. 411 — Recent possession of stolen goods.

Where the stolen goods were recovered from the possession of the accused seven days after the theft and the accused's explanation that the goods were kept with him by another was not believed; presumption under Section 114, Evidence Act, was drawn and the accused was convicted under Section 411, Penal Code. Sentence however was reduced to a fine of Rs. 250. 1951 AMLJ 21.

——S. 411 — Possession of stolen property — Essentials — Wife and younger brothers of accused — Liability of — Presumption under Section 114 — When arises — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 114).

The only fact that the wife and younger brothers of the accused reside in the same house from which the stolen property was recovered by itself is not sufficient to prove that they were in joint possession of the stolen iron safe wher there is no indication that the safe was recovered from any room which was locked and the key to that room was provided by any of these persons. For the purpose of holding joint possession some conduct or act which shows dominion over stolen property should also be proved against the accused and the presence of stolen property alone in the house cannot be considered sufficient.

The words used in Section 114 of the Evidence Act are that a Court 'may presume' and the word 'may' in the section is not equivalent to "shall'. A discretion is vested in the Court whether in the proved circumstances of the case a presumption should be raised or not.

Held, that in the circumstances of the case the other residents of the house at best passively acquiesced and they were not in any way exercising any dominion over the stolen property from which a justifiable presumption may be drawn that they were in joint possession of it. ——S. 411 — Evidence — Possession of stolen property — Presumption—Once stolen property is recovered from the possession of a person under circumstances mentioned in illustration (a) of Section 114 of the Evidence Act, the presumption of knowledge cannot ordinarily be limited in its scope or dissociated from the nature of the possession or the manner in which property was originally acquired. See Evidence Act (1872), Section 114, Illustration (a). 1954 Cri LJ 1439: AIR 1954 All 684.

——S. 411 — Stolen article dug out by A from his field — Presumption against A — Evidence Act (1872), S. 114.

In the course of the investigation of theft by house-breaking, A took the Station Officer to his field and there he dug out a silver article which was one of the articles stolen from the house of the complainant. On the basis of this evidence the Magistrate convicted A and sentenced him to four months' rigorous imprisonment. In appeal the Sessions Judge held that the recovery of the article did not fasten the guilt upon A and so he acquitted A of the charge under Section 411 holding that no presumption of the offence under Section 411, I. P. C. arises against A under illustration (a) of Section 114, Evidence Act.

Held, that the view taken by the Sessions Judge was erroneous. ILR 17 All 576; AIR 1943 Oudh 298, Rel. on. AIR 1931 Lah 4, Not foll. 1951 All WR 555: 1952 RD (HC) 64: 1952 All LJ 61: 1953 Cri LJ 1297: AIR 1953 All 572 (572) (Pr 3).

——S. 411 — Knowledge — Proof of — Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Ill. (b).

The existence of knowledge of an accused person can be seldom proved affirmatively by positive evidence. The prosecution in cases under section 411, Penal Code, has, therefore, to depend generally either on a presumption under section 114, Ill. (b), Evidence Act, arising from possession of recently stolen properties or from inferences derived from proof of circumstances which render it difficult to exclude the fact of knowledge.

It is difficult to lay down any rule of law that an accused person should not be called upon to explain his possession of properties unless the theft was a recent one. A good deal depends on the circumstances of each case.

Where the nature of property or the circumstances indicate that possession is not in the natural course of things but is incriminatory, the fact that a false explanation is given by the accused renders the prosecution case stronger. AIR 1950 All 631 (631, 632) (Prs 4, 5).

A woollen coat, a muffler and a sweater belonging to a student were stolen and were found in the possession of the accused. He was wearing the sweater and muffler and he produced the coat on being asked about it. He stated at the time of recovery that he had purchased the clothes from a person who had told him that he had got them from students as a reward. The person selling the clothes was a short statured boy while the clothes were such as to fit a man of tall stature and the coat was not an old one:

Held, that the presumption arising against the accused under Section 114, Illus. (a), Evidence Act, was sufficiently rebutted by his giving an explanation as to how he got possession of the clothes;

Held, further, that the circumstances were not such as must have convinced the accused as a reasonable person that the clothes were stolen property and, therefore, it could not be held that the accused received the clothes knowing or having reason to believe that they were stolen property. 1950 All LJ 344: 51 Cri LJ 1331: 1950 All WR (HC) 453: 1950 All Cri Cas 142: AIR 1950 All 497 (498, 499) (Pt B) (Prs 4, 7, 8).

They did not come for 2 or 3 days and the accused did not know the contents of the bag. Held, on evidence of the case that the explanation for possession could not be said to be inherently or palpably false and benefit of doubt could be given to the accused See Evidence Act (1872), S. 114 (a). 1957 Cri LJ 1393: AIR 1957 Andh Pra 1006.

The conviction of applicant under Section 411, Indian Penal Code, was based on the fact that while in custody he made a statement in pursuance of which the discovery of incriminating articles was made from the courtyard of his neighbour's house. However, the seizure memo. did not say that discovery was made at the instance of the accused or that the articles were seized from his possession.

Held, that knowledge to the accused of the incriminating articles being buried in the house of his neighbour by itself would not be enough to infer that he was in the possession so as to raise a presumption of his guilt under Sec. 114, Illustration (a) of the Indian Evidence Act. 1960 MPLJ (Notes) 176.

Per P. V. B. Rao, J. — Sections 411 and 412, I. P. Code lay down the conditions required to be proved in order to convict a person as a receiver or retainer of stolen property. But if in the process of proof the Court draws a presumption under Section 114, Evidence Act, that a person who is in possession of the stolen goods soon after the theft, has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, then the requirements of Sections 411 and 412, I. P. C. are complied with and the conviction of the accused under Section 411 or 412 on the basis of such presumption cannot be held to be bad on the ground that there is no evidence that the accused received the properties recovered from them from somebody else.

Per Narasimham, C. J.:— The impression that when an accused is charged with an offence under Section 411, I. P. C. the prosecution must invariably establish affirmatively that the stolen property was first in the possession of some other person and then was transferred to the possession of the accused is erroneous and is not supported by the decisions in AIR 1954 SC 39 and 22 Cut LT 456. Where the facts found justify the drawing of the presumption under Illustration (a) to Section 114 of the Evidence Act and a Court draws such a presumption it is obvious that the accused who was found in possession of stolen property soon after theft and who is unable to give a satisfactory explanation for his possession is either a thief or a guilty receiver, and it is not necessary for the prosecution to further show that possession was transferred to him from some other person. ILR (1957) Cut 680: 24 Cut LT 1: 1958 Cri LJ 534: AIR 1958 Orissa 51 (55 to 57) (Pt B) (Prs 15, 29, 30) (DB).

——S. 411 — Burden of proof — Duty of prosecution — Currency Notes recovered from houses of accused — Inference of guilty knowledge.

The mere fact that properties such as currency notes, alleged to be stolen, are recovered from some places in the houses of the accused persons cannot lead to an irresistible inference that they are guilty of dishonest retention of stolen property under S. 411, I. P. Code, when the currency notes recovered thus are unidentifiable and in fact were not identified by the complainant as part of his stolen property. The mere fact that the places from which the property was recovered at the instance of the accused are rather unusual and may indicate that the property did not belong to the accused would not relieve the prosecution from proving that the property did belong to the complainant and not to the accused and that the accused were in dishonest possession of stolen property. 17 Cut LT 93: 53 Cri LJ 916: AIR 1952 Orissa 162 (162) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

Where the ornaments were lying buried underneath a palm tree in an open space which was accessible to anyone, the fact that they were recovered from that place at the instance of the accused is not sufficient to hold that the accused was in possession of the same. For a conviction under S. 412, the mere proof of knowledge or belief that the articles were stolen articles is not sufficient. It must further be proved that the accused had knowledge or belief that possession of articles had been transferred by the commission of a dacoity. ——S. 411 — Applicability — Article produced but from pawnee — Sufficiency for conviction.

It is not necessary for conviction under S. 411, I. P. C., that the stolen property should have been physically produced from the actual possession of the accused. All that is necessary for the prosecution to show is that the accused person after the property was stolen came into control of the stolen property and that he did so dishonestly or having reason to believe that it was stolen. Where the accused had pawned the stolen property it was held that it satisfied the condition that the accused had come into possession of or had received the stolen property although at the time it was actually produced, it was produced not from the physical possession of the accused but from that of the pawnee. ——S. 411 — Possession of stolen property — Burden of proof.

In order to sustain a charge under S. 411, I. P. Merely because a person is found in possession of the property of some other person no presumption can be raised by the Court that property was stolen property. The prosecution has to prove by satisfactory evidence that there was theft and the property in question was stolen. ——S. 411 — Evidence — Person found in possession of property taken in dacoity — Inference. It may be presumed that he knew the property to have been stolen, but not that he knew or had reason to believe that it was stolen in a dacoity rather than, in a theft. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illustration (a)). AIR 1955 NUC (Madh Bha) 3781.

——S. 411 — Essentials — Condition for conviction — The property recovered was stolen property, has to be proved. AIR 1955 NUC (Madh Bha) 3732.

——Ss. 411, 457, 380 — Applicability — Evidence Act (1872), S. 114 — Accused charged under Sections 457 and 380 — Evidence only of recovery of property — Accused held guilty under S. 411 only. AIR 1955 NUC (Madh Bha) 3375.

——S. 411 — Evidence — Possession of accused incriminatory — False explanation — Effect.

Where the nature of the property and the circumstances indicate that the possession of the accused was not in the natural course of things, but was incriminatory, the fact that a false explanation was given by the accused regarding receipt of the property makes the prosecution case stronger and more acceptable. 1954 Cri LJ 1713: AIR 1954 Manipur 13 (16) (Pt C) (Pr 6).

——S. 411 — Evidence — Possession of stolen property — Sufficiency for conviction — Where a perusal of the statements made by the accused makes it clear that he did not make any statement to the effect that he kept the stolen articles in the place wherefrom they were found and there is nothing in those statements to show or suggest that the stolen articles could be deemed to have ever been in the possession of the accused no burden is cast on him to show how he came to know the shop where the stolen articles were found. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 114. AIR 1955 NUC (Mys) 924.

——S. 411 — Information received from accused — Admissibility in evidence — Accused charged of dishonestly receiving stolen property — Evidence regarding discovery of stolen articles at instance of accused admissible in evidence. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 27. (1964) 6 OJD 284.

——S. 411 — Evidence and proof.

Conviction under S. 411 of the Penal Code cannot be maintained in the absence of any proof that the accused persons were found near about the place of occurrence, i.e., where alleged theft was committed, or that they had received the articles from anybody else. The mere recovery of stolen properties certainly is not enough for a conviction under S. 114. AIR 1958 Orissa 51, Rel. on. (1959) 1 OJD 430: (1959) 25 Cut LT 454.

——S. 411 — Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illus. (a) — Possession of stolen goods — Burden of proof — While accounting for the possession of stolen goods, the burden is not cast upon the accused to establish beyond reasonable doubt that his explanation is true. Even if it might possibly be true, he is entitled to an acquittal, because the primary burden of proving the entire case beyond reasonable doubt rests on the prosecution. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illus. (a). 1958 Cri LJ 657: AIR 1958 Orissa 106.

——S. 411 — Charge of dishonest retention of stolen currency notes — Burden of proof.

Where the accused is charged with dishonest retention of stolen currency notes, it is the duty of the prosecution to prove conclusively that the notes belonged to the complainant. If the prosecution fails to identify the notes as part of the stolen property the accused is entitled to an acquittal. The mere fact that the notes were produced by the accused from some unusual concealed place may indicate that they did not belong to the accused but that by itself cannot lead to the inference that they belonged to the complain ant. (1951) 17 Cut LT 93 (DB).

——S. 411 — Applicability — Explanation by accused for possession accepted as true — He must be acquitted — Evidence Act (1872), S. 114. AIR 1955 NUC (Punj) 458 (DB).

——S. 411 — Evidence and proof — Where it is established that a dacoity had been committed and also that property was recovered from an individual many days after the offence and there is no other evidence of that person's participation in the offence, it would be unsafe to convict him of the offence of dacoity on the evidence of the recovery alone. Where it can be assumed that he received the property from others and from the circumstances it can also be presumed under Section 114, Evidence Act that he had reason to believe when he received the property that it was stolen he is clearly guilty under S. 411. See Penal Code (1860), S. 395. AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 262 (DB).

12. Conviction and sentence.

——S. 411 — Sentence — Conviction under — Release on admonition — Legality — Section 3 of the U. P. Act is applicable only to those offences which were punishable up to two years' imprisonment. Section 411 Penal Code is punishable with imprisonment up to 3 years. Held that S. 3 of the U. P. Act was not applicable. Life in villages in Bengal and elsewhere would become quite impossible if theft of cattle and the crime of receiving stolen cattle were dealt with leniently. ——S. 411 — Essentials for conviction — Duty of Court to examine accused — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 342) — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illus. (a)).

In order to convict a person under S. 411, I. P. Code, it is first necessary to prove that the property found in his possession was stolen property and next that the person concerned knew or had reason to believe that the same was stolen property. Under illustration (a) of S. 114, Evidence Act before a presumption could be drawn against the accused person he has to be asked to account for his possession. The answer may be furnished by the accused of his own accord and if he does not do so, the Trying Magistrate has to ask under the provisions of S. 342, Cr. P. Code to explain the circumstances appearing in evidence against him. In a case where the Court is to convict a person for his failure to offer an explanation for the possession of the goods, it is incumbent upon the Court to ask the accused for an explanation and only when the accused fails to offer a reasonable explanation the Court is permitted to draw any presumption. 1958 Cri LJ 1012: AIR 1958 Cal 414 (416) (Pr 3) (DB).

——S. 411 — Dishonestly receives or retains — Proof of receipt of stolen property from another necessary.

An accused person cannot be held liable under S. 411 if there is no evidence as to who was in possession of the stolen property before he came to retain it. In order to bring a person in possession of any movable property within the mischief of S. 411, the prosecution must in the first instance prove that there was some other person who was in possession of that property and from whom the accused received it. SECTION 412

(Penal Code (1860), S. 412.)

1. Scope and applicability.
2. Evidence and proof.
3. Joint possession.
4. Section 412 and 396.
5. Practice and procedure.

1. Scope and applicability.

——S. 412 — Stolen property — Receiving or retaining of — Husband storing looted property in house — His wife busily scrubbing in keeping such property in house — Such passive partnership is not enough to sustain charge under Section 412 against wife.

In Indian rural society, particularly among the illiterate, husband is a dominant partner. If such a husband brings decoited or looted property into the house, his wife can neither prevent the husband from keeping the property in the house nor can know it even. She, being a passive partner in life has merely to acquiesce in the property being kept in the house even if she knows that the property was obtained in the course of a dacoity. Mere acquiescence in the receipt of stolen property is not the adoption of receipt so as to constitute receiving or retaining within the meaning of S. 412, Penal Code. The charge under S. 412 cannot, therefore, be sustained against the wife. 1955 (1) Cri LJ 344 (346) (Pr 5) (All).

——S. 412 — Evidence Act (1872), S. 27 — Section is not ultra vires — AIR 1939 All 1 (FB): held no more good law in view of AIR 1960 SC 1125 — Recovery of stolen property from persons charged under S. 412, Penal Code cannot be ignored. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 27. 1961 (2) Cri LJ 248: AIR 1961 All 614 (DB).

(Overruled on another point in AIR 1962 All 161 (FB).)

——Ss. 412 and 392 — Accused not arrested on spot — No satisfactory evidence but only of identification and recovery of stolen property — Conviction under S. 392 changed to one under S. 412. See Penal Code (1860), S. 392. 1960 All Cr R 198: 1961 All WR (HC) 275: 1960 All LJ 915.

——S. 412 — Evidence — It is dangerous to rely purely on police evidence, which is contradictory, when recovery witnesses have been produced. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 3518.

——S. 412 — Evidence — Possession of stolen property — Presumption — Once stolen property is recovered from possession, presumption of knowledge cannot ordinarily be limited in its scope or dissevered from nature of possession or manner in which property was originally acquired. 1954 Cri LJ 1498: 1954 All WR (HC) 60: AIR 1954 All 634.

——S. 412 — Presumption — Illustration (a) to S. 114, Evidence Act does not limit the scope of the section and it is possible to raise a presumption in certain circumstances that a person found in possession of property stolen in a dacoity was either a dacoit or had received the property knowing it to have been stolen in a dacoity. Such a presumption however cannot be raised merely on account of a person being found in possession of property stolen in a dacoity. 51 Cri LJ 1000: AIR 1950 All 393.

——Ss. 412, 411 — Exclusive possession of stolen property — Property recovered from house in which accused lives jointly with his brothers — Exclusive possession of accused is not established. See Penal Code (1860), S. 411. 51 Cri LJ 538: AIR 1950 All 130.

——S. 412 — Evidence — Proof of offence under — Looted property recovered from house of accused and from jungle near his house — Evidence of possession not challenged by accused — Conviction under S. 412 held correct. See Penal Code (1860), S. 396. AIR 1955 NUC (Assam) 4257 (DB).

——S. 412 — Evidence — Ownership and previous possession of property by complainant proved — Accused found in exclusive possession — Prosumption. Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illustration (a). AIR 1955 NUC (Madh Bha) 3862 (DB).

——S. 412 — Evidence — Person found in possession of property taken in dacoity — Presumption — It may be presumed that he knew the property to have been stolen, but not, that he knew or had reason to believe that it was stolen in dacoity rather than in a theft. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illustration (a). AIR 1955 NUC (Madh Bha) 3781.

——S. 412 — Benefit of doubt — Prosecution for offences under S. 395 and 412 — Penal Code — Suspicious circumstances—Delay in filing F.I.R. not explained — No mention of accused persons in F.I.R. — Confession made by accused, not true — Identification by prosecution witnesses of accused persons doubtful — Benefit of doubt held rightly given. See Criminal Trial — Evidence (1963) 29 Cut LT 455.

——Ss. 412, 411 — "Receives or retains any stolen property" — In S. 412 the words "receives" and "retains" occur side by side and the collocation of receipt and retention of stolen property is obviously intended to do away with the necessity of proving the presence of dishonesty at the time of possession. 1958 Cri LJ 657: AIR 1958 Orissa 106.

——S. 412 — Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illustration (a) — Presumption about honest retention of stolen property — The words 'receives' or 'retains' are generally used together and though Illustration (a) to S. 114, Evidence Act, expressly refers to dishonest receipt of stolen property a presumption about dishonest retention may equally be made by virtue of that Illustration. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illus. (a). 1958 Cri LJ 657: AIR 1958 Orissa 106.

——S. 412 — Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illustration (a) — Possession of stolen goods — Burden of proof — While accounting for the possession of stolen goods, the burden is not cast on the accused to establish beyond reasonable doubt that his explanation is true. Even if it might be true though the jury are not convinced that it is true, he is entitled to an acquittal because the primary burden of proving the entire case beyond reasonable doubt rests on the prosecution. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illus. (a). 1958 Cri LJ 657: AIR 1958 Orissa 106.

——S. 412 — Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illustration (a) — Applicability of presumption to offence under S. 412, Penal Code — The principle of illustration (a) to S. 114, Evidence Act applies not only to cases of ordinary theft but also to cognate offences like dacoity and when other necessary facts have been established, the presumption under S. 114, can be taken recourse to. AIR 1950 All 398, Doubted. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illus. (a). 1958 Cri LJ 657: AIR 1958 Orissa 106.

——S. 412 — Proof — Presumption under Section 114, Evidence Act — Effect — Proof of receipt from another not necessary. See Penal Code (1860), S. 411. 1958 Cri LJ 534: AIR 1958 Orissa 51 (DB).

——Ss. 412 and 396 — Accused found in possession of articles taken in dacoity soon after its commission — Presumption is that accused was one of the dacoits and not receiver. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illus. (a). 1960 BLJR 268: ILR 39 Pat 361.

——S. 412 — Applicability — Person found in possession of property taken in dacoity soon after commission of dacoity — Proper inference to be drawn is that he was one of the dacoits. See Penal Code (1860), S. 395. AIR 1955 NUC (Pat) 3235 (DB).

——S. 412 — Evidence.

Held, that recovery from the possession of the accused of certain ornaments identified to be forming part of proceeds of the dacoity, within 3 weeks, was sufficient to establish a case against him under S. 412. ILR (1956) Punj 140: 1957 Cri LJ 678 (681) (Pt B) (Pr 10) (Punjab).

——S. 412 — Applicability — Accused found in possession of camel shortly after commission of dacoity — No proof that he was one of the dacoits — Accused unable to justify possession and dishonestly denying possession could be convicted under S. 412. 1958 Raj LW 527.

——S. 412 — Evidence and proof — Where it is established that a dacoity had taken place and also that property was recovered from an individual many days after the offence and there is no other evidence of that person's participation in the offence it would be unsafe to convict him of the offence of dacoity on the evidence of recovery alone. Mere possession of the property by the accused is not enough to convict him under Section 412. See Penal Code (1860), S. 395. AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 262 (DB).

3. Joint possession.

——S. 412 — Conviction — Property looted in dacoity found in house jointly occupied by two brothers — It is difficult to convict one of them, when there is no evidence from whose possession property was recovered. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 3518.

——S. 412 — Applicability — Possession of stolen property — Co-owner of premises from which property is recovered — Liability of.

The mere circumstance that certain persons were co-owners of premises from which stolen property is recovered is not by itself wholly sufficient to establish any criminal liability to sustain a conviction under S. 412 I. P. Code, unless there are other circumstances showing that they (or any of them) were well aware of the existence of such property and were in control thereof. 52 Cri LJ 154: AIR 1951 Pat 296 (298) (Pt C) (Pr 2) (DB).

4. Sections 412 and 395.

——S. 412 — Ingredients of offence — Recovery of goods stolen in dacoity from house of accused at their instance—Evidence relating to identification of accused not believed — Effect — Conviction under Ss. 395 and 412 — Legality.

Held it would be meaningless to convict the accused both under Ss. 395 and 412. 1958 Andh LT 476.

——S. 412 — Applicability — Case of dacoity — One of accused found in possession of articles stolen in dacoity soon after commission of dacoity —Evidence establishing that he was not on scene of dacoity at the time of its commission but waiting at some distance in a lorry — He can be convicted under S. 412 and not S. 395. See Penal Code (1860), S. 395. AIR 1955 NUC (Assam) 4191 (DB).

——S. 412 — Article taken away in dacoity found in accused's possession after two months — Presumption. — Conviction.

Held, that it would not be fair or safe to draw the presumption that the accused took part in the dacoity, but that the circumstances of the case and his association with the other accused justified the presumption that he received the article with the knowledge that if had been removed in a dacoity and therefore, his conviction should be altered into one under S. 412. 1957 Cri LJ 1457: AIR 1957 Tripura 48.

5. Practice and procedure.

——Ss. 412, 395 — Practice and procedure — Conviction of same accused under Ss. 395 and 412 is not proper. See Penal Code (1860), S. 395. 1956 Cri LJ 662: AIR 1956 All 336.

——Ss. 412, 395 — Accused convicted under Section 395 — He cannot be convicted under S. 412 in respect of production of articles taken in dacoity. AIR 1944 Cal 39 and AIR 1956 All 336, Foll. 1960 BLJR 268: ILR 39 Pat 361.

——Ss. 414, 410 — Despatch of woollen goods and bed-sheets by railway — Goods found missing from railway wagon — Large quantity of goods similar to those proved to have been despatched recovered at the instance of accused — Absence of adequate explanation for presence of such large quantity of articles similar to those found missing — Recovery of goods within few days of their disappearance and presence of silk and paper labels of the consignor on most of the woollen goods recovered and of certain manuscript writings on the bed-sheets written by someone connected with the consignor — Above circumstances held sufficient to justify the finding that the property recovered was proved to be stolen property. See Penal Code (1860), S. 410. 1964 (1) Cri LJ 129: AIR 1964 SC 170.

——S. 414 — Several accused under the section — All acquitted on ground that property recovered was not proved to be stolen property — Appeal against acquittal of some of the accused alone — Power of appellate Court to record a finding about the recovered property being stolen property. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 423. 1964 (1) Cri LJ 129: AIR 1964 SC 170.

——S. 414 — Conviction under — Requirements.

It is not necessary for a person to be convicted under S. 414 that another person must be traced out and convicted of an offence of committing theft. The prosecution has simply to establish that the property recovered is stolen property and that the accused provided help in its concealment and disposal. (1963) 2 SCWR 145: 1963 Mad WN 674: 1964 All Cr R 57: 1964 Jab LJ 175: 1964 Mad LJ (Cr) 226: (1964) SCJ 407: (1963) 2 Ker LR 159: 1963 SCD 1018: 1964 (1) Cri LJ 129: 1964 All WR (HC) 15: AIR 1964 SC 170 (173) (Pt C) (Pr 14).

——S. 414 — Scope — Conviction under — Altered into one under S. 403. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 236. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 1995.

——Ss. 414 and 411 — Scope — Assists, meaning of — Person selling property knowing it to be stolen — Absence of finding as to receipt of such property — Person is not guilty either under Section 414 or S. 411.

Per Gurtu and Sankar Saran JJ.;— Section 414 clearly applies, as its language shows, to persons who voluntarily assist in the selling or disposing of or making away with property. Assistance means that there must be a person assisted. Except in the coloquial sense, a man cannot be said to assist himself. There must be another person whom he assists.

Neither the thief nor the receiver of the stolen properties can come under S. 414. Section 414 aims at bringing within its scope persons who have not been proved to be in possession of the property. The thief naturally is in possession of the property. So is the receiver of the stolen property. But there may be a third category of persons who never get actual custody or possession of the stolen property and yet assist in its disposal. It is to that category of persons that section 114, I. P. C. would be applicable.

Hence where a person sells a property knowing it to be stolen property, he cannot be convicted for an offence punishable under S. 414 or S. 411 of the Indian Penal Code in the absence of any finding about the receipt of that property by such person. The word 'believe' in S. 414 is much stronger word than the word 'suspect' and therefore, to establish an offence under it, it will not suffice merely to show that the accused was careless or that he had reasons to suspect that the property was stolen. For establishing an offence under the section the prosecution must adduce evidence of circumstances from which it can be reasonably inferred that the accused had reasons to believe that the property was stolen property. 1. Scope.

● ——Ss. 415 and 419 — Offence of cheating — When constituted — Cheating by personation — Accused applying for post in Medical service in pursuance of notification of Public Service Commission — False representation as to name and qualification made in application — Accused appointed by Government to the post and drawing his salary for several years — Accused held guilty under S. 419.

Cheating can be committed in either of the two ways described in S. 415, I. P. C. Deceiving a person is common in both the ways of cheating. A person deceived may be fraudulently or dishonestly induced to deliver any property or to consent to the retention of any property by any person. The person deceived may also be intentionally induced to do or to omit to do anything which he would not have done if not deceived and which act of his caused or was likely to cause damage or harm in body, mind, reputation or property.

Held on facts, (i) that as the accused had served efficiently and obtained good reports from his departmental superiors there was no likelihood of causing any damage to the reputation of the Public Service Commission by such appointment. In the circumstances the accused had not committed the offence of cheating as defined in the latter part of S. 415, I.P.C. even though he had deceived the Service Commission by representing himself to be a duly qualified candidate and thus induced it to select him for the post; (ii) that the conviction of the accused for the offence of cheaing by personation punishable under S. 419, I. P. Code was correct. The representation made by the accused to the Service Commission continued and persisted till the final stage of the Govt. passing an order of appointment and that therefore, the Government itself was deceived by the misrepresentation he had made in his application presented to the Service Commission. Though the Public Service Commisson was independent statutory body doing advisory function deception of such advisor was deception of the Government which is expected to pay heed to its advice and act accordingly. In consequence of the appointment, Government had to pay him the salaries which fell due. Therefore, the accused by deceiving the Government dishonestly induced it to deliver property to him and thus committed the offence of cheating under the first part of S. 415, I. P. C. ● ——Ss. 415, 511 — Applicability — Interpolation in document made in January, 1944 — Contract with Government made on 2-3-1944 but to come into effect retrospectively on 11-11-1943 — Offence.

Held, that latter date could not be utilised to impute criminal liability to accused for act done by them before the contract was executed.

The interpolation of an inflated figure in the document was made by the accused in January, 1944, whereas the contract entered into with the Government of India was dated March 2, 1944. That contract was to come into effect retrospectively, i.e., from November 11, 1943.

Held, that whatever legal effect it might have on the civil rights of the parties under the document, it was impossible to invoke the said date to impute a criminal liabilty to the accused for an act done by them before the contract was executed. Though the document might have been forged in anticipation of the execution of the contract with the Government, there was nothing on record to prove that fact. The interpolation might have been made for many reasons. The Court was not justified to base a finding on a pure surmise that it might have been done only in anticipation of the accused entering into a contract with the Government. State of Bombay v. ——S. 415 — 'False pretence' — Meaning of — English Law.

Halsbury's statement of law that 'the false pretence must be of a fact that exists or has existed', does not apply to India. For false pretence in English Law is narrower in its application than what is contemplated by 'cheating' in S. 415, I. P. Code. A promise as to future conduct not intended to be kept is not by itself cheating under English law, but under the Penal Code this will amount to cheating, as is clear from a reading of Illustrations (f) and (g) to S. 415. 1960 All LJ 33: 1960 Cri LJ 188: 1960 All WR (HC) 67: 1960 All Cr R 84: AIR 1960 All 103 (111) (Pt D) (Pr 32) (DB).

——Ss. 415, 420 — Requirements.

In order to bring a case within the ambit of Section 420, I. P. Code, it is necessary that there should be a direct connection between the false representation and the delivery of the property for the doing of something by the persop deceived. It is also necessary that the act or the omission complained of should cause or is likely to cause damage or harm to the person in body, mind, reputation or property. 1956 Andh LT 678: 1956 Andh WR 805.

——Ss. 415, 417 and 420 — Scope — Cheating — Wilful misrepresentation of fact with intent to defraud — Money obtained by accused on hypothecation bond by false representation that property belonged to him — Offence falls under Section 420, Penal Code. 1961 Ker LT 318: 1962 (1) Cri LJ 649.

——S. 415 — Dishonest intention — Receiving and retaining property without dishonest intention — Conduct, though unethical in refusing to return property, cannot attract the section.

It is only where a fraudulent representation leads to delivery of property, which is dishonestly retained, that the ingredients of section 415 of the Code are established. Otherwise every debtor who repudiates his civil liability, on some false pretext or other, would be guilty of cheating, and that is not the law. The criminal process can only be used against a person, when the ingredients of the offence are proved by the complainant, beyond any element of reasonable doubt. Because the conduct of a debtor has been highly unethical, the criminal process cannot be used against him, in order to compel him to discharge a civil liability. 1965 All Cri R 429: 1965 All WR (Supp) 19: 78 Mad LW 164: 1965 (2) Cri LJ 514: AIR 1965 Mad 452 (453) (Pr 2).

——S. 415 — Essentials— Ingredients of offence.

The definition of cheating in Section 415, I. P. Code, consists of two parts to both of which the words "by deceiving any person" apply. The first part is applicable if there is deception and the accused has attempted fraudulently or dishonestly to induce the complainant to deliver property to him. But the second part does not require the inducement to be fraudulent or dishonest. ILR (1950) Nag 908: 1951 All WR (Supp) 45: AIR 1951 Nag 315 (317) (Pt C) (Pr 15).

——Ss. 415 and 420 — Scope — Words 'which act or omission is likely to cause' in second part have no application to first part of section — Deception resulting in obtaining property dishonestly from person deceived — Sufficient to constitute offence.

Section 415 consists of two parts. The first refers to the offence of cheating committed by fraudulently or dishonestly obtaining delivery of any property from the person deceived. That part also makes the act by which the deceived person is made to consent to the retention of such property, an offence of cheating. The words 'which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property', occurring in the second part of Section 415, have no application to the first part of that Section. They have reference only to the offence of cheating committed by inducing the deceived person to do or to omit to do something which he would not do or omit to do if he were not so deceived.

The petitioner was a police constable who was charged with having committed an offence of theft. He approached the son of the Police Prosecutor in charge of his prosecution, and induced him to allow the petitioner to take the papers away from his house.

Held, that the son of the Police Prosecutor having been deceived and having been fraudulently and dishonestly induced to deliver the police papers to the petitioner, the offence of cheating was thereby undoubtedly committed by the petitioner. 39 Mys LJ 1070: 1963 Mad LJ (Cri) 146: 1962 (2) Cri LJ 559 (560) (Prs 8 to 10,11) (Mys).

——S. 415 — Essentials — Deception — What is.

Deception is an essential ingredient of the offence of cheating. Where the persons who granted the permits as well as the persons who obtained the permits are alleged to be in the conspiracy there is no question of one deceiving the other. 1953 Cri LJ 1289: AIR 1953 Pat 225 (228) (Pt B) (Pr 11).

2. Intention.

——Ss. 415 and 420 — Intention to defraud.

A negotiated an accommodation draft with his friend B and told the latter that the draft would be honoured if it was presented 14 days after date. Subsequently the Bank decided not to honour the draft when it was presented. The circumstances tended to show that A honestly believed at the time of negotiation that when the draft would be presented subsequently, it would be honoured:

Held, that A was not guilty of cheating. AIR 1951 Assam 82 (85) (Pr 13) (DB).

——S. 415 — Borrowing money on representation — Intention to defraud — Absence of.

A borrowed money from B on promissory notes on the representation that he wanted the money urgently for depositing it with the forest department. B lent the money not because of A's representation but because he knew that A was solvent. A however did not make the deposit on account of certain dispute between him and the forest department.

Held, that A was not guilty of the offence of cheating as he could not be said to have the intention at the time of borrowing to defraud B. 1951 Mad WN (Cri) 113: 1951 Mad WN 385: 1951-1 Mad LJ 554: 1952 Cri LJ 396: AIR 1952 Mad 183 (183) (Prs 4, 5).

——S. 415, Illus. (i) — Applicability — Constructive notice of previous registered mortgage, validity of plea in defence to charge of cheating — Selling property on misrepresentation that it was unencumbered — (T. P. Act (1882), S. 3, Explanation I and S. 55 (1) (a)).

The object of Explanation (1) to Section 3, T. P. Act, is to safeguard the interests of a third party who has acquired a good title under a previous registered instrument but it does not in any way alter or modify the criminal liability of a person who deliberately suppresses certain facts or misstates certain facts. If 'A' has encumbered some property to 'B' by a registered deed and he then sells it again to 'C', representing that the property was unencumbered, 'C' cannot acquire a good title in the property because he must be deemed to have had notice of the previous registered sale deed in favour of 'B' but nevertheless he was made to part with money on a misrepresentation made by 'A' and therefore 'A' is guilty of the offence of cheating. The doctrine of constructive notice cannot be imported into criminal law for the purpose of determining whether a person is guilty of the offence of cheating or not. It is the intention which is important and not whether a man is under a legal duty to disclose or suppress facts within his knowledge. The non-disclosure of the previous registered encumbrances will not affect the right of the previous mortgagees and will not pass a complete title to the purchaser; the purchaser may nevertheless have been cheated. The extent of the purchaser's rights in the property which he acquired has nothing whatever to do with the fact that he was cheated. 3. Fraudulent or dishonest inducement.

——Ss. 415 and 420 — Applicability — Bogus schemes — Persons induced to deposit money — False representations and suppression of material facts — Offence.

Held, that the promotors of Bharat Helpers and their associates cheated a large number of persons and thereby induced them to deliver money in the form of deposits and, therefore, the offence under Section 420, was clearly established. 1960 All LJ 33: 1960 Cri LJ 188: 1960 All WR (HC) 67: 1960 All Cr R 84: AIR 1960 All 103 (109) (Pt A) (Prs 24, 25) (DB).

——S. 415 — Sale of land — Dishonest inducement by accused as to his title to land sold.

If a person dishonestly induces another to believe that he is the sole owner of a certain land while in fact he is not, and deceives that person into purchasing the land his act amounts to cheating as defined in Section 415 of the Code. If there is an indemnity clause in the sale deed, the purchaser can also maintain a civil suit, but that fact does not preclude him from launching a criminal case, for cheating. 1959 MPC 40: 1959 MPLJ 181: 1959 Jab LJ 212.

Where the accused an employee of a firm who was not authorised to receive or encash cheques on behalf of the firm, had by getting an employee of the treasury to identify him as a partner of that firm induced the treasury officer to deliver money to himself on certain cheques issued to the firm by Government and used the same; Held, that what the accused did might amount to cheating but not criminal breach of trust. AIR 1955 NUC (Pat) 4900.

——Ss. 415 and 420 — Applicability — Woman fraudulently induced to believe that she was executing conveyance deed for Rs. 13,000 — Conveyance in fact for Rs. 7,500 — Signing of conveyance and handing it over to purchaser would come within latter parts of Ss. 415 and 420. 2 Sau LR 122, Explained. AIR 1955 NUC (Sau) 957 (DB).

4. Property.

——Ss. 415 and 420 — Property — Meaning of — "To deliver any property" — "Property" means movable property AIR 1955 NUC (Sau) 957 (DB).

5. Damage necessary.

——Ss. 415 and 419 — Cheating — Ingredients — Damage or harm must have been caused to person deceived and not to any one else — Damage in mind includes mental pain or anguish and not merely injury to mental faculties.

Where the accused pretending to be a certain well known eye-specialist induced the complainant to allow him to perform an operation on the eye of his 12 year old son and thereby deceived the complainant causing him a good deal of mental anguish.

Held, that the accused was guilty under Section 419, I. P. Code. 1962 All Cr R 25: 1962 All WR (HC) 1: 1961 (2) Cri LJ 759: AIR 1961 All 639 (640) (Pr 5).

——S. 415 — Loss or damage arising from act of cheating must be proximate and not vague or remote.

The loss or damage spoken of in the latter part of Section 415 which defines "cheating" must be loss or damage which is the proximate result of the act. It must be a natural consequence of the act complained of. If it is a mere possibility and not a necessary consequence of the act, such loss or damage, even if it actually occurs, would not satisfy the element of damage which is one of the essentials of the offence of cheating as defined under Section 415, I. P. C. The question whether loss or damage is likely to occur to the person deceived, in a particular case, has to be determined with reference to the facts and circumstances of that particular case. It is not a question which can be determined with reference to any particular view of the facts taken in a particular case. 1952 RD (HC) 175: 1952 All LJ 232: 1953 Cri LJ 815: AIR 1953 All 381 (381) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

——S. 415 — 'Damage' — Meaning of.

It cannot be said that the Public Service Commission has a physical body, though a mind for it may not be strictly wanting. Nevertheless, it would be indisputable that it has a reputation as an entity and that it would consist in its ability to make the right selection of candidates after due consideration of the applications before it. In such a case, if it is led or beguiled to make an unworthy selection or to select a person who is incompetent or disqualified, such an act cannot but be held to affect the reputation of the Public Service Commission and as a consequence thereof damage or harm would follow. No special proof of damage or loss need be insisted upon, as the Body deceived in any case had been harmed. Where there is fraudulent inducement by the accused to select him by mentioning false details in his application to the Public Service Commission, the ingredients of Section 415, I. P. Code as contained in the latter part of that section, must also be held to exist. 19 Mad LJ 271, Expl. and Distinguished; AIR 1941 Lah 460 and AIR 1924 Cal 495, Distinguished. 1960 Cri LJ 1181: AIR 1960 Andh Pra 441 (444) (Pt C) (Pr 8).

——Ss. 415 and 419 — Essentials of offence — Proof of actual damage or harm — Necessity — Likelihood of harm or damage to professional reputation — Presumption of.

It is not necessary that the act or omission to constitute cheating should actually have caused damage or harm of the kind mentioned in Section 415. It is sufficient if it is likely to cause such damage or harm.

Where a doctor as a result of conspiracy between the accused to cheat the officers of a life insurance company, certifies a dying man as a first class life, that act is likely to cause harm to his morale as well as to his professional reputation. It is something which the Court will presume having regard to the common course of natural events and human conduct. 1961 (2) Cri LJ 98 (101) (Pt B) (Prs 28, 29) (Ker).

——S. 415 — Applicability — Accused inducing petitioner to enter into shipping contract — No intention to cause wrongful gain or wrongful loss alleged — Offence.

Held, that this was one of those cases, in which a civil dispute was sought to be litigated in a criminal Court under the guise of a charge of cheating. It was not the case of the complainant that in inducing him to enter into a contract, there was any intention to cause wrongful gain to the accused or to cause wrongful loss to the complainant. There being in this case no direct relation of cause and effect between the representation alleged to be made and the harm or damage to the complainant as a result of the breach of contract, offence under Section 415 had not been committed in consequence of the accused persuading the complainant to enter into a shipping contract. AIR 1925 Cal 100, Rel. on. 61 Bom LR 1648: 1960 Nag LJ 81: ILR (1960) Bom 64: 1960 Cri LJ 812: AIR 1960 Bom 268 (268, 269) (Prs 2 to 4, 6) (DB).

——S. 415 — Applicability — Deception of A but loss caused to B — No offence.

The act or omission under Section 415, I. P. Code, must be such as to cause or is likely to cause damage or harm to the person deceived. No offence of cheating can be said to have been committed if one person is induced by deception to do or omit to do something and the act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to another person. ——Ss. 415, 419, 182 — Misrepresentation to Magistrate as to identity of person, whether cheating — Offence under S. 182, if committed.

Where in a proceeding for issue of a certificate of marriageable age of a certain girl, the applicant by producing another girl misrepresents to the Magistrate that the girl produced is the girl whose age is required to be certified, the offence committed is not cheating, since the Magistrate would not suffer any harm in mind, body or reputation. The offence made out is one under Section 182, since it is a case of a misrepresentation as to identity of the girl where other ingredients of the offence are also present. 3 Sau LR 248: 1952 Cri LJ 850: AIR 1951 Sau 8 (9) (Pt A) (Prs 3, 4) (DB).

——Ss. 415, 419, 468 — Applicability — Damage necessary — Travancore Penal Code, Ss. 416, 420, 469.

The 1st accused made the 2nd accused falsely personate the complainant and execute a document of sale in his favour of property which did not belong to the 2nd accused, but which was the property of the complainant. For registering that document the first accused took the 2nd accused to the Sub-Registrar's Office and the document was registered by the 2nd accused in these circumstances. The charge in the case specifically mentioned that the person deceived by the two accused was the Sub-Registrar.

Held, that condition as regards deception might be said to be fulfilled in the present case because but for the deception the Sub-Registrar would not have consented to register the document. But no harm or damage could be said to have been caused to the Sub-Registrar in body, mind, reputation or property. In the circumstances, the conviction and sentence so far as Section 419 was concerned could not be supported and must be set aside. But the case under Section 468 had been fully made out. 1953 Cri LJ 275: AIR 1953 Trav-Co 34 (35) (Prs 4, 4a) (DB).

6. Contracts opposed to public policy.

——S. 415 — Contracts opposed to public policy.

A criminal prosecution for cheating can be based on a contract which cannot be enforced in a civil Court. If A induces B to part with a sum on the assurance that he would exert his influence over the Income-tax Officer so as to persuade him to assess B in a particular manner the Magistrate has only to see what offence has been committed by A, and it is immaterial whether the offence involved an illegal or void contract which could not be enforced in a civil Court. 1951 All WR (HC) 640: 1951 All Cri Cas 165: 1952 Cri LJ 747: AIR 1952 All 428 (428, 429) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 7).

7. Attempt.

——Ss. 415, 417 — Fraud by post — Insured letter purporting to contain Rs. 400 — Amount actually sent less — Offence of cheating and not of attempt to cheat is committed.

Where a person purports to send Rs. 400 under an insured cover but the cover, when opened before postal authorities delivering it, is found to contain currency notes of only Rs. 130 and it is established that he had actually sent Rs. 130 instead of Rs. 400 as shown by the cover:

Held, that he was guilty of an offence of cheating and not of an attempt to cheat as the act of signing the acknowledgment and the consequent misuse of the acknowledgment by the person was likely to cause embarrassment and even actual danger or harm to the complainant in mind and property. ——Ss. 415, 420, 511 — Knowledge of falsehood of pretence — Attempt to cheat.

The accused told the complainant that he knew how to double currency notes. The complainant however did not believe this but he gave the currency notes to the accused with a view to entrap the accused.

Held, that as the complainant knew the falsehood of the pretence the accused could not be convicted of the offence of cheating. But making false pretence and asking for currency notes were in themselves sufficient for holding the accused guilty of the offence of attempt to cheat 52 Cri LJ 644: AIR 1951 Madh B 100 (101) (Prs 7, 8).

8. "Dishonest concealment of facts".

——S. 415, Expl. — Dishonest concealment — It can occur even in absence of statutory duty to speak — A executing agreement to sell house to S — Subsequent agreement to sell it to R and receipt of earnest money — A charged for cheating — A's plea that he disclosed to R about previous negotiations with S — Evidence in support of that plea is inadmissible under S. 92, Evidence Act, 1872 — But earlier agreement of sale is not material defect in property or seller's title thereto — Omission to make its disclosure is not fraudulent — (T. P. Act (1882), S. 55 (1) (a)) — Evidence Act (1872), S. 92.

A, the accused, who had executed a deed of agreement to sell his house to S entered into a similar agreement with R and received earnest money from him. When he was charged for cheating he pleaded that he had disclosed to R about the previous negotiations with S. The Sessions Judge relied on a case of Sindh High Court AIR 1915 Sind 21 which was dissented from by a division bench of the Allahabad High Court in AIR 1956 All 341; he also accepted the version of the accused regarding subsequent disclosures to R and acquitted him. In revision against the acquittal it was held:

(i) that the Session Judge erred on the point of law. There could be dishonest concealment even in the absence of statutory duty to speak AIR 1956 All 341 (DB), Ref.

(ii) that under Section 92 of the Evidence Act, no evidence of any oral agreement or statement could be admitted as between the parties to the agreement for purposes of contradicting, varying, adding or subtracting from the terms of the agreement which had been duly reduced to the form of a document, and hence it must be assumed that either the accused had not made disclosure to the complainant about the earlier contract of sale with S or the same, if disclosed, could not be taken note of in the eye of law.

(iii) that under Section 55 (1) (a) of the T. P Act (1882), the seller was bound to disclose to the buyer only such material defect in the property and in his title thereto, of which the seller was but the buyer was not aware, and which the buyer could not have, with ordinary care, discovered. The fact that the accused seller had entered into an earlier agreement of sale with S could neither be called a material defect in the property, nor in the seller's title thereto, inasmuch as he still remained full owner thereof. The last para of Section 55, T. P. Act, itself made it quite clear that only an omission to make such disclosures, as were mentioned in Section 55 (1) (a) could be fraudulent. An omission to disclose a fact that the seller had already entered into an agreement of sale with another person would not amount to any material defect in the property or in the seller's title thereto which the accused-seller could be said to be bound to disclose to the complainant-buyer. Thus the accused could not be held to be guilty of fraud by withholding that information from the complainant: AIR 1956 All 341, Disting. 1965 All WR (HC) 587: 1965 All LJ 786: 1968 All Cr R 380.

——S. 415 — 'Dishonest concealment of fact', meaning of.

The explanation to Section 415 makes it clear that dishonest concealment of fact is a deception within the meaning of the section. The concealment of fact that is said to be a deception is dishonest concealment and not illegal and deliberate concealment. If a statute requires a person to mention a fact and he conceals it, it is illegal, but not necessarily dishonest concealment of the fact. This concealment may be deliberate or conscious or may be accidental or bona fide arising out of ignorance of law. Accidental or bona fide concealment, even though it is illegal, may not be said to be deception.

Concealment of a fact is not quite the same thing as mere refraining from stating it and something more than mere refraining from stating a fact is required to constitute concealment. But that something need not be a statutory provision compelling exposure of the fact; any other duty, such as arising out of the circumstances in which the parties are placed and the nature of the negotiation between them is enough. Also any act done, or precaution taken to prevent the fact from being brought to the notice of other party is concealment even in the absence of a duty to state it.

Every concealment does not, however, amount to deception; only dishonest concealment amounts to deception according to the explanation. Concealment can be dishonest even in the absence of a legal obligation to speak. Dishonesty has nothing to do with infringement of the law; it depends upon the state of mind at the time of the concealment or the intention behind it. If the intention is dishonest, the concealment is dishonest even in the absence of a duty to speak. 2 All LJ 268 and AIR 1915 Sind 21, Dissented from. 1956 Cri LJ 664: AIR 1956 All 341 (346, 347) (Pt C) (Prs 39, 40) (DB).

——Ss. 415 and 420 — Cheating — Essentials of offence.

In order to constitute an offence of cheating, it must be established that the accused deceived the complainant dishonestly inducing him to part with any property in his favour which he would not have parted but for the deception played on him. This dishonest intention is an essential ingredient of the offence. In other words, mens rea on the part of the accused must be established before he can be convicted of an offence of cheating. 1965 All Cri R 71: 1965 All WR (HC) 53: 1965 All LJ 272.

——S. 415 — Ingredients of offence — Merely parting with goods — Offence — Property how to be returned when accused acquitted — Criminal P. C., S. 517.

As far as the offence of cheating is concerned, the most essential ingredient that has to be proved by the prosecution is that one was cheated and thereby he was dishonestly induced to deliver the money to the accused.

Section 517, Criminal P. C., refers not only to property in respect of which offence has been committed but also to the property before the Court in its custody. Section 517 as amended by Act XVIII of 1923 empowers the Criminal Court to deliver the property or document to any person claiming to be entitled to its possession. The Court has therefore jurisdiction to decide the question of possession.

In normal circumstances, on acquittal or discharge the property would be returned to the person from whom it was seized. But when there are circumstances showing that the person concerned either has not claimed the property as his specifically or when there are no grounds to hold that the property could belong to the accused, the Magistrate has certainly got a discretion to return the property to the complainant and in such a case it may even be unreasonable to return the property to the accused persons. It depends on the facts of each case. It is not imperative that in all cases of acquittal that Magistrate shall return the property to the accused.

In proceedings under Section 517, Criminal P. C., which are more in the nature of proceedings analogous to civil proceedings in which the question of guilt of the accused is not to be determined the Court will be justified in acting on confessions. (1960) 2 Ker LR 287: (1961) Mad LJ (Cr) 350 (Ker): 1960 Ker LT 1051.

——S. 416 — Personation — Prosecution —Duty of.

As Section 416, itself mentions, it is not necessary for the prosecution to make out whom the accused has been personating, for the one personated may be imaginary or non-existing or unknown. Thus, where the prosecution has established that one K. V. Rama Rao who was an overseer had, by his representation that he was K. Rama Rao, an Engineering graduate of Mysore University and had, on that basis, induced the Public Service Commission to select him for a post in Government service, it must be held that the ingredients of the offence of cheating by personation have been made out, and it is not necessary to consider who was actually the holder of the degree. 1960 Cr LJ 1181: AIR 1960 Andh Pra 441 (443) (Pt B) (Pr 6).

●——Ss. 417, 420 and 120-B — Offence under S. 420 — "Dishonestly" — Meaning of — Intention to cause wrongful loss or wrongful gain temporarily is enough.

Per Majority: (Sahai and Singh ,JJ. Misra J Contra): — Even if the intention of the offender is only to cause temporary wrongful gain to himself or temporary wrongful loss to the other, the offence alleged to have been committed must be held to be the one under Section 420, I. P. C. The mere fact that the offenders intended to cause only temporary gain or temporary loss will not affect the situation. AIR 1957 SC 369, Foll.

Per S. C. Misra J. (Contra):—The very wording of the two sections would show that mere fraudulent conduct, which amounts to cheating under Section 417, would not make out a case under Section 420, because in order to sustain a charge under this section, it must be established further that the cheating was with dishonest intention which would be to the effect that at the time that the property alleged to have been received by the accused by fraudulent means from the complainant there is a dishonest intention not to return it or to pay for it to the complainant. If the intention be only to make temporary use of the property, it would not in every case amount to cheating accompanied with the dishonest intention, although in some cases it might be so. It is thus clear that the ingredient of dishonest intention is necessary. In the case of advance of money for obtaining goods the real criterion among other circumstances is to find out the intention of the accused person as to whether he intended to repay it at the time he succeeded in getting the amount or the goods on credit in question. It is the sum total of evidence available in a case and the circumstances surrounding it which will be decisive in the matter and not an abstract or general reference to the meaning of the words "dishonestly" or 'fraudulently' as incorporated in Sections 24 and 25 of the Code which may leave the position as vague and uncertain as the two words themselves. ——S. 417 — Ingredients of.

An offence under Section 417, I. P. Code can be said to be committed both where the accused deceived some one and induced him to deliver a certain property to him by fraudulent or dishonest representation, as also where the person deceived is proved to have done something which he was not bound to do on a fraudulent or dishonest inducement by the accused, and such an act caused or was likely to cause damage or harm in body, mind, reputation or property of the person on whom the deception was practised. The law does not require that the property fraudulently or dishonestly obtained by the accused must belong to the person on whom the deception is practised. The property may be 'any property' as is obvious from Section 415, I. P. C., which defines the offence of cheating.

Where it had been proved that the accused not only deceived the Tahsildar and thereby persuaded him to deliver the possession of the fields to him, but he had also intentionally induced him to pass an order for the delivery of the fields which he would not have passed but for the deception, and it has also been proved that because of the deception practised by the accused on the Tahsildar, the Tahsildar had actually been demoted, it could not be said that the conviction of the accused for the offence under Section 417, I. P. C. was unjustified. 1963 Raj LW 416: ILR (1963) 13 Raj 928.

——S. 417 — Applicability — Mere breach of contract — Offence — Intention — Proof.

A mere breach of a contract cannot give rise to a criminal prosecution. The distinction between a case of mere breach of contract and one of cheating depends upon the intention of the accused at the time of the alleged inducement. Where there is no clear and conclusive evidence of the criminal intention of the accused at the time the offence is said to have been committed and where the party said to be aggrieved has an alternative remedy in a Civil Court, the matter should not be allowed to be fought in a Criminal Court. Subsequent conduct is no doubt a piece of evidence of criminal intention but that alone cannot be enough in every case, and it is the circumstances of each case, which have to be considered along with subsequent conduct. 1959 Cri LJ 1216: AIR 1959 Tripura 40 (41) (Pt C) (Pr 8).

The petitioner put himself forward as owner of a certain plot of land which in fact he was not. As a result of this false representation, the complainant was induced to part with a sum of money and a deed of sale was executed by the petitioner in favour of the complainant's son. The document was registered in due course. A considerable time afterwards it was discovered that the petitioner had nothing to do with the land in question and that he had perpetrated fraud upon the complainant. The accused was tried for offences under Sections 419, 420 and 465, Penal Code. The Magistrate acquitted the accused of offences under Sections 419 and 420, Penal Code, but convicted him under S. 465, Penal Code.

Held, that the effect of the order of acquittal of the accused in respect of charges under Sections 419 and 420 was that he could not be convicted of the offence under Section 465, Penal Code. When the Magistrate did not find it possible to believe the prosecution case on the two charges with all their implications, the charge under Section 465, I. P. Code could not possibly survive the consequence of such acquittal. 96 Cal LJ 177: 59 Cal WN 832: 1955 Crl LJ 1246: ILR (1957) 1 Cal 510: AIR 1955 Cal 473 (473, 474) (Prs 8, 10, 12) (DB).

Accused had purchased a car in the name of her minor daughter. The car was insured with a company. The fact of the owner being a minor was not known to the company. On two occasions the car was involved in an accident and was damaged. The claims for which sums of money were paid by the insurance Company were genuine claims and the money paid represented the cost of the actual damage to the car and other expenses incidentally incurred in connection with the accidents. In all these transactions the accused represented to the employees of the Insurance Company as being the owner of the car and in this connection signed a large number of documents as such including letters, claim forms and receipts, two of which were attested by her husband. The accused was charged for a number of individual charges relating to offences of cheating and forgery. It was contended by the accused that since no injury was established, she could not be convicted for forgery.

Held, that the accused had committed the offence of cheating by personation under Section 419, Indian Penal Code and various offences of forgery with regard to all the documents, which she signed. (Since no charge under Section 419 had been framed, accused was convicted under Sections 467 and 468, I. P. C. ILR (1966) 2 Punj 424.

——Ss. 419, 467 and 471 — Evidence and proof — Presentation for encashment of National Saving Certificates by one not the real holder — Clerk in Post Office identifying such person — Fact that he knew that person encashing the certificates was personating for real holder must be proved.

One Dr. Miss S. Rao had purchased National Savings Certificates. These certificates purported to be in the name of "S. Rao" so that the holder could either be a male or a female. Upon an information received from her about the loss of these certificates investigation was started and on finding that some one had presented them for encashment at the Post Office, the clerk in the post office was charged to have endorsed the certificates to the effect that the holder was personally known to him and that the holder of the certificates had signed in his presence.

Held, that the prosecution should have established that the accused made this endorsement for the purpose of some wrongful gain. Further, the prosecution had not been able to trace out the person who got these certificates encashed. Mere proving that some one other than Dr. Miss. S. Rao personated for her and forged her signatures on the certificates to get them encashed by cheating the post office was not enough for the conviction of the accused. It was necessary for the prosecution to prove further that the accused while making the endorsement regarding the identity knew that the person presenting the certificates for encashment was not its holder and was personating for the actual holder of the certificates. The prosecution having failed to establish this fact, no fraudulent act on the part of the accused could be held to have been proved. 1962 Raj LW 263: ILR (1962) 12 Raj 270.

● ——S. 420 — Applicability — Sale of goods on conditions of payment of price one delivery — Non-payment, when amounts to cheating.

Where the charge against the accused is under Section 420 in that he induced the complainant to part with his goods, on the understanding that the accused would pay for the same on delivery but did not pay, if the accused had at the time he promised to pay cash against delivery an intention to do so, the fact that he did not pay would not convert the transaction, into one of cheating. But if, on the other hand, he had no intention whatsoever to pay but merely said that he would do so in order to induce the complainant to part with the goods, then a case of cheating would be established. ——Ss. 420, 415 — Case concerning only first portion of S. 415 — Question of inducing person deceived to do or omit to do not material.

Where the case of cheating is concerned with the first portion of S. 415 in the definition of cheating, the question of inducing the person deceived to do or omit to do anything and the question whether the act or omission caused or was likely to cause damage or harm to that person in mind, body, reputation or property do not enter into the picture at all. 1963 (1) Cri LJ 716 (720) (Pt D) (Pr 20) (Tripura):

——S. 420 — Suitors' money in deposit with Government fraudulently withdrawn by practising deception — It is cheating.

Where the suitor's money in deposit with the Government is fraudulently and negligently allowed to be withdrawn from Government deposit by the conduct of Government servants, the suitors cannot be made to suffer and the Government will have to make good the amount, though the Government may realise the money from their servants who are at fault in so allowing the money to be withdrawn. It cannot be denied that the Govt. suffered damage. Government is a corporate body and will certainly come within the definition of 'person' in S. 11. Government has to act through its servants. Thus if deception is practised on a servant of the Government and the servant is made to do anything, which he would not have done if he had not been deceived and which act caused damage in property to the Government, it will amount to cheating within the meaning of S. 415. 1963 (1) Cri LJ 716 (721) (Pt E) (Pr 24) (Tripura).

——S. 420 — Applicability — Breach of contract — Offence.

Mere breach of a contract cannot give rise to a criminal prosecution. The distinction between a case of mere breach of contract and one of cheating depends upon the intention of the accused at the time of the alleged inducement which may be judged by his subsequent act, but of which the subsequent act is not the sole criterion. Where there is no clear and conclusive evidence of the criminal intention of the accused at the time the offence is said to have been committed and where the party said to be aggrieved has an alternative remedy in a Civil Court, the matter should not be allowed to be fought in a Criminal Court. 1959 Cri LJ 1027: AIR 1959 Tripura 38 (39) (Pr 9).

2. Essentials.

——Ss. 420, 417 — Applicability — Cheating — Essentials — Dishonestly induces — Wrongful gain or wrongful loss — Proof of one of them is enough — Accused obtaining credits from banks for large sums on strength of hundis supported by forged railway receipts — Offence.

For a person to be convicted under S. 420, I. P. Code, it has to be established not only that he has cheated someone but also that by doing so he has dishonestly induced the person who was cheated to deliver any property, etc. A person can be said to have done a thing dishonestly if he does so with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another person. Wrongful loss is the loss by unlawful means of property to which a person is entitled while wrongful gain to a person means a gain to him by unlawful means of property to which the person gaining is not legally entitled. These are the two facets of the definition of dishonesty and it is enough to establish the existence of one of them. The law does not require that both should be established. AIR 1932 Bom 545 and ILR 28 Mad 90 (FB), Dist.

Where a consignor of goods draws a hundi for the price of the consignment on some firm and supports that hundi with the railway receipt obtained by him in respect of the consignment, the party in fact pledges the consignment to the bank discounting the hundi and, therefore, in such a transaction the railway receipt cannot be regarded as anything else than a security for that transaction. If that security turns out to be worthless because the value of the consignment is only a fraction of what it was represented to be, the discounting of the hundi by the party drawing it must necessarily be regarded as unlawful.

The accused consigned small quantities of goods but subsequently tampered with the railway receipts by showing that the consignments were of large quantities. The accused then endorsed the railway receipts in favour of one of the firms belonging to them. Those firms drew large sums of money commensurate with the large quantities of goods specified in the forged receipts and on the security of those receipts drew demand drafts or hundis in favour of various banks.

Held, on the facts and circumstances of the case that the accused by obtaining credits for large amounts on the strength of hundis supported by forged railway receipts had made a wrongful gain and, therefore, was guilty under S. 420, I. ——Ss. 420 and 415 — Requirements of S. 420 — There should be direct connection between false representation and delivery of property for doing of something by the person deceived — Act or the omission complained of should cause or is likely to cause damage or harm to the person in body, mind, reputation or property. 1956 Andh LT 678: 1956 Andh WR 805.

——S. 420 — Essentials — Representation may not be sole cause of damage or loss — It is enough that complainant was partly influenced by misrepresentation. AIR 1955 NUC (Hyd) 415 (DB).

——420 — Ingredients of offence — False representation to accused's knowledge at time of making it must be proved.

The main ingredients of an offence of cheating are that there should be deception of a person so as to fraudulently or dishonestly induce that person to deliver any property to any person or to consent that any person shall retain any property or intentionally induce that person to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind reputation or property. From this it follows that a wilful misrepresentation of a definite fact with intent to defraud would be cheating. Along with this, it has to be shown that the representation made was false to the accused's knowledge at the time when it was made. An act would not come within the definition of cheating if the representation has turned out to be untrue at a future date.

Where the accused made a representation to the complainant that he would supply labour and in pursuance thereof he got two sums of money at different times as an advance but ultimately failed to act according to the representation and the complainant did not allege anything more than this, the act would not come within the definition of cheating. 10 J and K L R 172: 1952 Cri LJ 1230: AIR 1952 J and K 26 (26, 27) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5).

——S. 420 — Requirements to constitute the offence — Accused collecting money by sale of lottery tickets — Lots were not drawn and prizes not distributed as stated in notice — Whether amounts to cheating.

In order to constitute an offence of cheating under S. 420, there should be dishonest or fraudulent intention. The offence of cheating should be distinguished from mere breach of contract. The distinction would depend upon the intention of the accused at the time of inducement which no doubt can be judged by subsequent acts but of which the subsequent act is not the sole criterion. The mere fact that lots were not actually drawn would not by itself lead to the conclusion that at the time they issued the notice and sold the lottery tickets they had no intention whatsoever to conduct the lottery. It may well be that the accused genuinely wanted to hold the lottery and collected the amount by sale of tickets and had no dishonest or fraudulent intention at that time but later after only a small amount was collected they could not keep up the promise of drawing the lots and distribute the prizes. Where there is no clear and convincing evidence of criminal intention of the accused at the time the offence is said to have been committed—and that must be at the time when they made the representation and induced payment of money—the offence cannot be said to have been proved beyond reasonable doubt. Where the necessary intention has to be inferred, the circumstances must be such as to exclude any reasonable hypothesis of good faith of the accused. 1964 Ker LJ 909: (1964) Mad LJ (Cr) 609: 1964 Ker LT 724.

——S. 420 — Essential ingredient — Mere parting with money not sufficient.

As far as the offence of cheating is concerned, the most essential ingredient that had to be proved by the prosecution was that the complainant was cheated and thereby he was dishonestly induced to deliver the money to the accused. Merely parting with money will not amount to cheating: (1960) 2 Ker LR 287: 1960 Ker LT 1051: 1961 Mad LJ (Cr) 350: 1962 (1) Cri LJ 654.

——S. 420 — Essentials.

The offence of cheating is made up of 2 ingredients: Deception of any person and fraudulently or dishonestly inducing that person to deliver any property to any person or to consent that any person shall retain any property.

Where the facts are that the accused to the knowledge of the complainant was solvent, and the money was lent to him on promissory notes carrying interest, that the money was wanted badly by the accused as he had to deposit the sum with the Forest Department, but no such deposit was made on account of disputes between the accused and the Department, it cannot be said that the accused had an intention at the time of borrowing of defrauding the complainant nor that the money was lent because of his representation that he wanted the money for paying to the Forest Department. It was at best the occasion for borrowing. On the facts, no case of cheating can be held to be made out. 1951 Mad WN 385: 1951 Mad WN (Cri) 113: (1951) 1 Mad LJ 554: 53 Cri LJ 396: AIR 1952 Mad 183 (183) (Prs 4, 5).

——S. 420 — Cheating — Essentials — Delivery of property may be through agent of the person deceived — Ownership of property delivered not necessary — Mere custody is sufficient.

To prove the offence of cheating it is not necessary that the person deceived must himself physically hand over the property to the person deceiving him. It is sufficient if he issues a payment order to his agent who in pursuance of that order, delivers the property to the person concerned. It is also not necessary that the property delivered by the victim of the deception must be his own property. It is sufficient if the property is in his custody or under his control. AIR 1937 Sind 293, Rel. on.

In order to practise deception, it is not necessary that the deceiver should make oral or written false representation. There may be deception by conduct or deception implied in the transaction itself. (1960) 2 Ori JD 261.

——Ss. 420, 471/467 — Ingredients of — Physical presentation of forged document — Not an important ingredient— Reference to presentation of chalans in charge held inconsequential.

Held, that the physical presentation of the chalans is not the important ingredient of the two offences. All that S. 471 requires is that there must be fraudulent or dishonest user of a document as genuine and knowledge or reasonable belief on the part of the person using the document that it is a forged one. Similarly, the ingredients of the offence under S. 420 are that the person deceived delivered to some one a valuable security or property, that the person so deceived was induced to do so, that such person acted on such inducement in consequence of his having been deceived by the accused and that the accused acted fraudulently or dishonestly when so inducing that person. 1961 BLJR 411: 1961 (2) Cri LJ 677: AIR 1961 Pat 451 (456) (Pt B) (Pr 16) (DB).

——S. 420 — Essentials — Gist of offence — Guilty intention — Contract — Putting forward false excuse to defeat contract is not enough to show guilty mind — It may amount to breach of contract. AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 4041.

——S. 420 — Charge under — Essentials — Charge held defective — Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 221, 223 and 225.

The most important ingredient in a charge under S. 420 is cheating. The second ingredient is that there must be dishonest inducement of the person deceived to deliver any property to any person or to make, alter or destroy the whole or any part of a valuable security or anything which is signed or sealed and which is capable of being converted into a valuable security.

Held, on facts that the Court ought to have made clear in the charges in the first place that there was cheating and secondly, that the person deceived was dishonestly induced either to deliver property or to make a valuable security or anything signed or sealed which was capable of being converted into a valuable security. Held, further that the finding of the Sessions Judge completely proved the charges as framed by him namely, that the accused as Nazir fraudulently inflated the amounts in the Treasury copies after they were signed by the District Judge that by such inflation he dishonestly induced the Treasury Officer to pass the payment orders for the inflated amounts, that the said amounts were cashed through the State Bank of India and that the accused converted the excess amounts to his own use. In this case the Treasury Officer was clearly deceived and by such deceit the Treasury Officer was induced to deliver to the peons the property namely, the payment orders which were passed by him for the inflated amounts on account of the deceit practised on him. There could be no doubt that this was done dishonestly by the accused as his intention was to make wrongful gain for himself of the inflated amounts. Thus it was clear that the appellant had cheated the Treasury Officer. What the Courts had to see was whether the Treasury Officer would have passed the payment orders if he had been told that the amounts therein had been inflated. Thus, cheating of the Treasury Officer had been established. Consequently even though the charge was defective, there was no difficulty in holding that the accused was guilty of cheating under Section 420, I. P. Code.

Since the accused who understood the charge and knew the case he had to meet and was not misled and prejudiced, and since there was no failure of justice, the defect in the charge could not be considered as material. AIR 1941 Lah 460 and AIR 1954 Mys 9. Distinguished; AIR 1956 SC 513 and AIR 1953 SC 462, Rel. on. 1963 (1) Cri LJ 716 (717, 718, 720, 721) (Pt B) (Prs 4, 6, 18, 21, 25).

3. Intention.

——S. 420 — "Dishonest intention" — Cheque not supported by credit in bank deposited by way of security — Cheque returned as not acceptable under Rules — On representation, cheque sent for encashment and dishonoured — Offence.

A, whose tender was accepted, was required to deposit Rs. 4.000 by way of security under the rules. Accordingly A delivered a cheque for Rs. 4,000 while in fact there was only Rs. 5 to his credit in the bank. As the prescribed procedure required the deposit to be made only in cash or postal securities, the cheque was returned. On next day A's brother saw the officer concerned and stated that A was not in station and that he could cash the cheque. On this representation the cheque was sent for encashment but was dishonoured. A was thereupon tried and convicted under S. 420, I. P. Code.

Held, that the conviction under S. 420 could not be sustained. As the cheque could not be accepted under the rules, there was no question of dishonest intention in delivering the cheque. In fact, there was no cheating till the cheque was returned as unacceptable. Further, in absence of any evidence to show that A had authorised his brother to act on his behalf, A could not be held responsible for the representation made by his brother. Laxmi Narain Kalra v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1956 Cri LJ 948: AIR 1956 SC 544 (545, 546) (Prs 4, 6 to 8).

——S. 420 — Intention — Intention can only be gathered from surrounding circumstances. See Penal Code (1860), S. 415. 1960 Cri LJ 188: AIR 1960 All 103 (DB).

——S. 420 — Essentials — Dishonest intention — Proof — Crossword competition — Complainant alleging that accused suppressed all correct solution sent by complainant — Offence — Civil liability made out — Discharge of accused — Legality — Criminal P. C., S. 253 (2).

Where allegations made by a complaint, taken at their face value, and left unrebutted, would constitute at best a ground for a civil suit, no criminal Court would go on with the case, but would leave the matter to be agitated in a Civil Court.

In order to constitute an offence under S. 420, Penal Code, there should be a dishonest intention on the part of the accused which must precede or accompany the act of dishonesty. The mere breach of a contract cannot give rise to a criminal prosecution. Cheating amounts to inducing the victim to enter into a bargain which he would not enter into if he knew the real facts. Where the allegations themselves would not under the law constitute an offence under S. 420, it is open to a Magistrate to discharge the accused.

Held, on facts that (1) there must be an element of personal gain to any of the accused and, in order to gain that advantage, if they defrauded the complainant, then it could be said that the object was to gain the advantage at the cost of the complainant. The organizer of the competition gained no advantage in depriving any one winner of his share of the first prize as he could not retain any portion of the prize amount. In any event he had to pay out the total amount of the prizes and all the winners were entitled to share it. There could, therefore, be no intention at the inception on the part of any of the accused to defraud the complainant; (2) that the question of suppressing the coupons subsequently also would not arise, for, there must have been an object for doing so, viz., to benefit any one prize winner; (3) that it might be that in sending the coupon to accused 1, accused 2 and 3 committed a breach of contract, but that would amount to negligence or omission which would only entitle the complainant to an action for damages; (4) that the Magistrate had therefore, jurisdiction to discharge the accused under Section 253 (2), Criminal P. C. on the ground that the charge was groundless, after recording his reasons for doing so. (1957) 2 Andh WR 368: (1957) Mad LJ (Cr) 603: 1957 Andh LT 777.

——Ss. 420, 415 — Intention to defraud — A negotiated an accommodation draft with his friend B and told him that it would be honoured if presented 14 days after date — Subsequently Bank decided not to honour the draft when it was presented — Circumstances tended to show that A honestly believed at time of negotiation that the draft would be honoured—Held that A was not guilty of cheating. AIR 1951 Assam 82.

——S. 420 — Applicability — Mens rea — Payment by cheque — Cheque dishonoured for want of rubber stamp — Inference of guilty knowledge.

The accused purchased certain goods from the complainant on the representation that the price would be paid on delivery at his house. On delivery the accused offered to pay by cheque which was accepted by the complainant's servant after objection. The bank dishonoured the cheque on ground of absence of rubber stamp — 'Mahabir Agencies' below the signature on it, showing the name of the firm in which the account stood. The complainant tried to contact him for two days but could not do so and, therefore, he filed a complaint under S. 420, I. P. Code.

Held, that the accused could not be held guilty under S. 420, I. P. Code. In the absence of any evidence to show that the accused deliberately omitted to put the rubber stamp on it, its absence was not inconsistent with the innocence of the accused. It was unreasonable to draw an inference of guilty knowledge on the part of the accused merely because he could not be contacted for two days. 1957 Cri LJ 1252: ILR (1958) 2 Cal 603: AIR 1957 Cal 663 (665) (Pt B) (Pr 11) (DB).

——S. 420 — Payment in cheque of goods purchased — Implications of — Held on facts that accused had intention to obtain goods by fraud and misrepresentation and, therefore, committed offence under S. 420.

Even apart from any representation the fact of drawing up a cheque and tendering the same in payment of goods purchased implies three statements, namely, that the drawer has an account with the bank in question: that he had authority to draw on it for the amount shown on the cheque, and that the cheque, as drawn, is a valid order for the payment of that amount that in the ordinary course of events the cheque, on future presentation, will be honoured. It does not imply any representation that the drawer already has money in the bank to the amount shown in the cheque, for he may either have authority to overdraw, or have an honest intention of paying in the necessary money before the cheque can be presented. What it implies is representation that the drawer intends to have sufficient money in his account when the cheque is presented in the course of business. The giving of a cheque in payment of goods must be distinguished from the giving of a post dated cheque. If a person gives a current cheque in course of business in payment for goods and if it is dishonoured and from the circumstances it can be inferred that he must have been aware when the cheque was given that it would be dishonoured so that the failure to make payment is not accidental, it must be held that the goods are obtained by false misrepresentation and the accused is guilty under S. 420. AIR 1939 Lah 95 and AIR 1933 Oudh 86, Foll.

Held on facts that when the cheque was given and delivery of the goods taken in lieu thereof the accused had the intention to obtain the goods by fraud and misrepresentation and, therefore, committed the offence under S. 420. ILR (1957) 2 Cal 443.

——S. 420 — Intention — Proof of — Breach of contract.

Where a complaint of an offence of cheating is made on the ground that the accused has entered into a contract with the complainant to work for the latter and that he had not commenced work in spite of complainant making two payments as agreed, the complainant has to establish a preconceived intention on the part of the accused of not carrying out the terms of the agreement. Such an intention cannot be presumed from the mere receipt of money and not working subsequently according to the terms of the agreement. Mere receipt of money would not be cheating unless it is shown that it was received with the preconceived intention of denying it later on. If the intention is changed subsequently it would not be cheating. 159 Ind Cas 167 (1) (Pat) and AIR 1923 Lah 621, Rel. on.

——S. 420 — Applicability — Post-dated cheque given against delivery of goods dishonoured — Offence.

A distinction must be drawn between a case where a post-dated cheque is given to discharge an existing liability and a case where it is issued against delivery of goods, property or cash with an assurance that it will be met on being presented to the bank on the due date and in due course. In the first case, the failure to provide the balance is merely a breach of promise, whereas in the latter it may have different consequences. Intention of the drawer at the time the cheque is issued is a material test and if it appears from the circumstances of the drawer that he did not expect that the cheque would be cashed in normal course, it would be prima facie proof of the intion to cheat. ——S. 420 — Applicability — Wilful misrepresentation — Intention to defraud.

——Ss. 420, 40 — Applicability — Cross-word competition — Condition that editor's decision will be final — Silence over competitor's correspondence — No mens rea — No offence — (Cross-word competition).

A prosecution was started under S. 420, Penal Code, against an editor of a paper who ran a cross-word competition on allegations that a correct solution was sent by the complainant's son and that in spite of this his son was not awarded the first prize One of the conditions imposed upon the competitors was that the decision of the editor was final and legally binding and that the editor will not enter into any correspondence whatsoever with the competitors. There was a dispute as to whether the competitior had put a correct solution or not.

Held, that in the circumstances, it could not be said that because the editor did not enter into the correspondence with the competitor, there was any 'mala fide' or any deception on his part. Nor was there mens rea in the case. No offence was, therefore, made out and the order of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the case under S. 420, Penal Code was, therefore, set aside. 1956 BLJR 86: 1956 Cri LJ 916: AIR 1956 Pat 256 (256) (Prs 1, 2) (DB).

——S. 420 — Intention to deceive — Essential ingredient — Such intention not proved — Merely taking money for paying as bribe to public servant — Cannot amount to cheating.

In order to bring the case within the offence of cheating it is necessary to prove that at the time the accused made the representation, he knew that it was false and it was made in order to deceive the persons paying the money. Merely taking money for the purpose of paying it as illegal gratification to a public servant without any intention to deceive, however, reprehensible it may be, cannot amount to the offence of cheating punishable under S. 420. ——S. 420 — Applicability — Breach of contract and cheating — Offence — Dispute when of civil nature — Nature of misrepresentation.

It is only in those cases where the representation on the basis of which the money is obtained by an accused person was correct at the time it was made or was not false to the knowledge of the accused and only subsequently the accused became dishonest or failed to carry out his part of the contract, that the dispute can be said to be of a civil nature. Where the accused knew from the very beginning that the representation which he was making to the complainant was a false one and it was on the basis of that representation that he obtained a certain sum from the complainant, the accused is guilty under S. 420 of the Penal Code. 1957 All WR (HC) 293: 1957 All LJ 141.

——S. 420 — False representation — What constitutes — Statement by companion of accused that accused had power to cure all diseases — Statement does not amount to false representation.

A false representation must relate to some fact that is either past or present. A statement purely affecting the future will not suffice. But the state of mind of a person may be a present fact.

The companion of the accused told the complainant that the accused had power to cure all diseases. After the companion told the complainant about the accused, the latter himself asked the complainant to give him whatever money he had and the complainant parted willingly with the money believing the companion.

Held, the money was parted with willingly. What the companion of the accused told the complainant would not amount to a false representation. The representation did not relate to a past or present fact but related to the future powers of the accused. It was, therefore, not a false representation to come within the meaning of the definition of cheating. 1965 (2) Cri LJ 499 (1): AIR 1965 Guj 269 (270) (Pr 1).

5. Concealment of facts.

——S. 420 — Dishonest suppression — Sale by public auction — Non-mention of prior encumbrance on property — Offence — Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 55 (1) (a).

Where the accused made no mention of a prior encumbrance on the property sold by him by public auction under the terms of which the successful bidder at the auction was made to pay only 1/4th of the amount when the hammer fell and another week's time was given for the balance to be paid, this interregnum afforded for the payment of the balance is not only to find time for the balance of purchase money but also must be taken to be the time afforded for ascertaining in regard to encumbrance, if any, pertaining to the property. If in spite of the opportunity so afforded the successful bidder does not choose to make enquiries of the auctioneer or obtain an encumbrance certificate for himself it cannot be said that the neglect of his own duties by the auctioneer is capable of imputing the existence of other factors as constituting dishonest conduct on the part of the vendor. It cannot be taken for granted that a property is always free from encumbrances and that a mere non-mention of the encumbrances by a vendor provides a sufficient guarantee that the property is free from encumbrances. The case of non-mention of encumbrances cannot be taken as dishonest non-disclosure of any material defect in the property which the buyer could not be made aware if he was only diligent as a vendee ought to be. It could not be said that there was any dishonest representation nor concealment of anything which the accused were bound in duty to disclose. 1960 Cri LJ 1067: 1960 Andh LT 672: AIR 1960 Andh Pra 405 (405, 406) (Prs 2, 3, 5).

6. Property.

——S. 420 — Property — Admission card to University examination.

An admission card to sit for the M. A. Examination of a University is property within the meaning of Section 420, Penal Code. ——S. 420 — "Property" — Meaning of — Import licence in the hands of licensing authority.

The word 'property' occurring in Section 420 of the Indian Penal Code does not necessarily mean that the thing of which a delivery is dishonestly desired by the person who cheats must have a money value or a market-value in the hand of the person cheated. Even if the thing has no money value in the hand of the person cheated, but becomes a thing of value in the hand of the person who may get possession of it as a result of the cheating practised by him, it would still fall within the connotation of the term 'property'. An import license, even when it is in the hand of the licensing authority is, therefore, 'property' within the meaning of Section 420, I. P. Code.

Further, although a particular thing may not have actual money-value or a market-value in the hand of a certain person, it may still have potential value and would be property within the meaning of Section 420 of the I. P. Code. It is, therefore, clear that even if the term 'property' be construed to mean a thing which has a value in the hand of the person cheated, even so, in the hands of licensing authority the import licence which certainly had a potential value would be property within the meaning of S. 420, I. P. Code.

Lastly, if the word 'property' is construed to mean that which acquires actual value only after it goes into the hand of the person who cheats, even then there is no doubt that the provisions of Section 420 must apply to this case. Case-law referred. 56 Bom LR 188: ILR (1954) Bom 554: 56 Cri LJ 289: AIR 1955 Bom 82 (87, 88) (Pt D) (Prs 14 to 16) (DB).

7. Valuable security.

——S. 420 — "Valuable security" — Import licence.

As an import licence obtained from the Office of the Chief Controller of Imports is a valuable security because it is evidence of the title of the person possessing it to import foreign goods into India, quite irrespective of whether the import licence, was property or not within the meaning of Section 420, it is certainly a valuable security, and from that point of view also, the offence is covered by Section 420, I. P. Code. 56 Bom LR 188: ILR (1954) Bom 554: 56 Cri LJ 289: AIR 1955 Bom 82 (88) (Pt E) (Pr 18) (DB).

8. Attempt.

● ——Ss. 420, 511 — Applicability — Attempt to commit offence — What amounts to — Attempt and preparation — Distinction.

The question whether a certain act amounts to an attempt to commit a particular offence is a question of fact dependant on the nature of the offence and the steps necessary to take in order to commit it.

A person commits the offence of 'attempt to commit a particular offence' when (i) he intends to commit that particular offence; and (ii) he, having made preparations and with the intention to commit the offence does an act towards its commission, such an act need not be the penultimate act towards the commission of that offence but must be an act during the course of committing that offence. (2) That it was well settled that the intention to cheat can only be gathered from the surrounding circumstances and no direct evidence is possible to ascertain the intention of the accused. 13. Evidence and proof.

● ——Ss. 420 and 193 — Offences of cheating and false evidence — No fraudulent representation — Reasonable explanation given — Burden of proof — Benefit of doubt.

In a prosecution under Section 420, Penal Code, it is the duty of the prosecution to prove affirmatively than the accused knew that the representations made by him are false. In the absence of circumstances from which it can be gathered that any such knowledge can be imputed to the accused, it is a case in which the benefit of reasonable doubt should be given to the accused. The burden of proof is never shifted to the accused. And if a reasonable explanation is given by the accused and the Court thinks that the explanation may reasonably be true, though it is not convinced about the truth, it should acquit the accused. 11 Cr AR 45; 11 Cal WN 159, Rel. on.

Held, (1) that there was not any fraudulent representation which had the effect of inducing the Petrol Rationing Authority to part with the coupons which it would not have otherwise done in this case; (2) that the explanation offered by the accused, though he had not been able to prove it conclusively, was a reasonable one and hence, he being entitled to the benefit of doubt, could not be convicted under Section 420; (3) that the conviction under Section 420 not being maintainable, his conviction under Section 193 also could not be maintained. ——S. 420 — Intention — Inference — Negotiable instrument — Failure to honour — Intention to cheat when can be inferred — Proof — Evidence Act (1872), S. 106.

The fact that the Hundi was not actually paid when it was presented for payment would not by itself make the accused guilty of cheating.

When a person draws a Hundi or a cheque he does thereby make a representation to the person in whose favour the Hundi or the cheque is drawn (1) that he has authority to draw that document and draw the document for that amount; (2) that the cheque or the hundi is good or valid order of payment of its amount; and (3) that the cheque or the Hundi would be paid when presented for payment. The prosecution in a case of this nature can only establish facts which point prima facie to the conclusion that the failure to meet the negotiable instrument was not accidental but was a consequence expected and therefore intended by the accused. The prosecution cannot be expected to have knowledge which the accused has in respect of his financial position, particulary as to whether he was in a position to meet his obligation or not specifically; all that the prosecution can do is to place before the Court the circumstances on which it may legitimately be found that the accused had not the intention to meet the demand evidenced by the negotiable instrument. The non-payment is an important circumstance. 1957 Cri LJ 438: 1957 All WR (HC) 4: 1957 All LJ 158: AIR 1957 All 246 (247, 248) (Pt A) (Prs 6, 12) (DB).

——S. 420 — Complainant induced to take accused as partners by their promise to invest capital — No fraudulent intention on the part of accused when they made the promise — Their subsequent failure to implement promise is no offence under the section.

In order to constitute an offence of cheating it is obligatory for the prosecution or the complainant to show that when the first inducement was made it was fraudulent and the intention was to deceive or cheat the complainant.

Where the accused having induced the complainant to take them as partners in his business by making a promise that they would invest sufficient capital into the business, failed to implement their promise and also took complete control of the goods and other stock-in-trade of the partnership but there was nothing to indicate that they had any fraudulent intention at the time when they made the promise:

Held, that no process could be issued against the accused under Section 420, Penal Code as the facts of the case made out only a civil dispute and not a criminal case. The mere fact that the accused took complete control of the goods and stock-in-trade of the partnership would not constitute an offence under Section 420 of the Penal Code. 1964 Kash LJ 197.

——S. 420 — Prosecution under — Availability of means to complainant for detecting fraud — Not material.

For prosecution for an offence under S. 420 of the Indian Penal Code it is immaterial whether the complainant had means of detecting the fraud if he had acted like a shrewd or prudent person. Where there is strong indication, on the evidence on record, that there were other and perhaps bigger persons involved in the fraud for which the accused was tried and they are not brought to book, the circumstance, though it does not excuse or exonerate the accused from his guilt which has been established beyond reasonable doubt, has, nevertheless a bearing on the question of sentence. ——S. 420 — Sentence.

The accused, a member of a District Board professing to have authority from the Board sold certain leaves by public auction. The complainant who was the highest bidder paid the purchase price then and there and obtained a kutchcha receipt. When the complainant failed to obtain the receipt he filed a complaint and the accused was convicted under Section 420 Penal Code and sentenced to a term of 6 months R. I. and a fine of Rs. 100. In the meanwhile the accused had deposited the amount in the office.

Held, that the accused was rightly convicted of the offence of cheating under Section 420, Penal Code.

Held, further that the sentence passed was excessive in the circumstances of the case. The accused was bound to lose his membership of the Board and to suffer in his reputation. Hence the sentence should be reduced to one month's R. I. with the same amount of fine. 1952 RD (HC) 175: 1952 All LJ 232: 1953 Cri LJ 815: AIR 1953 All 381 (381) (Pt B) (Pr 7).

——S. 423 — Applicability — 'Person' — Transfer of property by Hindu widow — Conveyance containing statement that transfer was for benefit of purchaser — 'Person' in S. 423 relates to purchaser — Widow receiving consideration — Offence.

Where it is not disputed that by the conveyances the properties concerned are to be transferred by a Hindu widow to the purchaser, then the use or benefit to accrue by such transfer will be that of the purchaser. According to S. 423, the false statement must relate to the person or persons for whose use or benefit the transfer is really intended to operate. The 'person or persons' must mean the purchaser or purchasers, as the case may be. True, the executant receives the consideration for the transfer and in that sense she receives a benefit, but then she is the vendor and the transfer cannot be said to be really intended to operate for her use or benefit. Hence, in such a case it cannot be said that an offence under S. 423 is made out. 61 Cal WN 723: 1957 All WR (Sup) 81: 1958 Cri LJ 370: AIR 1958 Cal 130 (130) (Pr 3) (DB).

● ——Ss. 424 and 441— Applicability — Movable property attached in execution of decree — Removal by judgment-debtor by unlawful means — Offence.

Where a property has been legally attached by a Court, the possession of the same passes from the owner to the Court or its agent. In that situation, the owner of the said property cannot take the law into his own hands, but can file a claim-petition to enforce his right. If he resorts to force to get back his property, he acts unlawfully and by taking the property from the legal possession of the Court or its agent, he is causing wrongful loss to the Court. The judgment-debtors in unlawfully taking away the cattle seized in attachment in execution of decree against them, are guilty of an offence under Section 424. AIR 1956 All 630 and AIR 1956 Raj 190 and AIR 1926 All 382, Rel. on; (1908) 25 TLR 87 and AIR 1934 All 711 and AIR 1933 All 46, Dist.; AIR 1930 All 329, held wrongly decided.

Held, that as the judgment-debtors entered the house of the decreee-holder with intent to remove the attached cattle constituting an offence under Section 424 of the Penal Code, they were guilty of the offence under Section 441 of the Penal Code. ——S. 424 — "Dishonestly or fraudulently" — Meaning of.

The tenants had harvested the crops and stored them over the open fields in Khalas for apportionment between them and the Zamindar. The tenants were prepared to pay the landlord a one-third share of the produce which was due to the landlord as rent but they were not prepared to pay any lag or neg over and above the one-third produce as demanded by the Zamindar. With the common consent of the landlord and the tenants, the crops were stored in the Khalas and they were estimated and appraised by the punches commonly nominated by them. Subsequently the tenants removed the crops as they thought that there was the risk of damage and deterioration on account of impending rains. But when they removed the crops they made an application to the Chief Commissioner that they had removed the crops and they were still ready to pay the Zamindar his one-third share of the rent.

Held, that under the circumstances it could not be said that the tenants concealed or removed the crops dishonestly or fraudulently with a view to deprive the Zamindar of his just dues. They were not therefore guilty under S. 424. 52 Cr LJ 193: AIR 1951 Ajmer 33 (33) (Pt B) (Pr 2).

——S. 424 — Applicability — Buffaloes illegally attached — Removal by owner next day — Offence.

It is not a correct proposition of the law that a person who removes property belonging to him but unjustifiably attached, does not act dishonestly or fraudulently. The right of an owner of an article does not remain the same after the article has been attached by a person having authority to attach it. If the attachment is illegal, his remedy is to approach the Court, which ordered the attachment. During the attachment only the Court ordering the attachment can exercise authority over it. If the property is attached by a person having no authority to attach it, the matter would be different because then the attachment would be without jurisdiction and would amount to nothing but theft. If the true owner does not recapture the property immediately after it was attached, he can only proceed in accordance with the law, that is the common law.

When the owner and his men without getting the attachment set aside, take possession of the buffaloes by using unlawful means (committing trespass upon the property, forming an unlawful assembly and causing injuries to sapurdar, etc), they act dishonestly and commit the offence under Section 424. The law does not contemplate a person to take the law in his own hands except to a limited extent as provided in the provisions relating to the private right of defence in the Penal Code. ——S. 424 — Scope — Section does not intend to punish persons claiming under right, such as partners.

Section 424, Penal Code, is intended to punish fraudulent debtors and their accomplices and does not intend to punish persons who claim under a right such as partners of firm. Where one partner alleges fraudulent and dishonest removal of all stocks by the other partner, and when a civil suit is pending between the partners, one of them should not be encouraged to take resort to criminal Courts to get the other partner, who has a claim of right in the property, punished under Section 424, as the dispute can be more appropriately decided by a civil Court. 15 Cr LJ 602, Rel. on.; AIR 1948 Cal 292: AIR 1950 Nag 99 and ——S. 424 — "Removal" — Meaning — (Interpretation of Statutes) — (Civil P. C. (1908), Pre.) — (Words and Phrases) — AIR 1939 All 710, Dissent. from.

The ordinary rule of interpretation is that words used in any enactment should receive their plain, natural and full meaning. In certain circumstances, the ejusdem generis rule is applied to a general term when it follows terms which refer to particular and specific objects. In such a case, the meaning of the general term is limited to objects of the same genus as those referred to in the preceding terms. Under Section 424 there may be "concealment" with or without removal and there may be 'removal' with or without concealment. Neither word is any more general than the other. There is no reason why the use of one of these words should curtail the meaning of the other. Section 424 is meant not only to punish those who conceal but also those who remove property with or without concealment if the act is done dishonestly or fraudulently. SECTION 425

(Penal Code (1860), S. 425.)

1. Intention.
2. Knowledge.
3. Wrongful loss or damage.
4. Destruction or change.
5. Property.
6. Bona fide claim of right.
7. Destruction of one's own property.
8. Master's liability for servant's negligence.
9. Mischief and theft.
10. Evidence and proof.
11. Practice and procedure.

1. Intention.

——Ss. 425, 427 — Intention to cause wrongful loss.

Where the accused stored earth and other materials on the open space between his house and that of the complainant and owing to the accumulation of water due to abnormal heavy rains the wall of the complainant's house was damaged:

Held, that the accused could not be convicted under Section 427 as there was no direct act on the part of the accused and no intention to cause wrongful loss or damage to the complainant. 1950 All LJ 281: 1950 All WR (HC) 346: 1950 All Cri Cas 107: 51 Cri LJ 1242: AIR 1950 All 464 (464, 465) (Prs 2, 3).

——Ss. 425, 427 — Ingredients of offence — Invasion of civil right — Offence.

Section 425, I. P. Code necessitates three things: (1) an intention or knowledge of likelihood to cause wrongful loss or damage to the public or to any person (2) causing the destruction of some property or any change in it or in its situation, and (3) such change must destroy or diminish its value or utility or affect it injuriously. No mischief can, therefore, be committed where the acts complained of amount to an invasion of civil right.

Held, that the allegations in the complaint amounted if anything, to an invasion of civil right and hence no offence under Section 427 was disclosed. 1958 Cr LJ 1396: AIR 1958 Cal 668 (669) (Pr 5).

——Ss. 425, 109, 441, 447 and 426 — Criminal trespass and mischief — Intention — Abetment — Where the accused instructed her maternal uncle to erect a roof which necessitated entering upon the property of the complainant and cutting his eaves. Held that the accused must be deemed to have intended to cause annoyance and wrongful loss to the complainant and must be held guilty of abetting the offence of mischief. See Penal Code (1860), S. 109. 1953 Cri LJ 881: AIR 1953 Sau 81 (DB).

——Ss. 425 and 429 and 97 — Ingredients of offence — Intention or knowledge.

To constitute offence of mischief, existence of requisite knowledge or intention to cause wrongful loss is essential — Buffalo trespassing on field of accused — Accused assisting his daughter in driving it away — Accused throwing stone at buffalo and hitting it while it was in his field — Death of buffalo — Held, no offence of mischief — Accused held within his right to protect property from trespass. AIR 1916 Nag 14, Dist. 1953 Cr LJ 1350: 6 Sau LR 75: AIR 1953 Sau 158 (159) (Pr 2) (DB).

——Ss. 425, 427 and 40 — Mens rea — Accused digging earth from his own land — Value of land not diminished — Loss of utility not proved — Intention to case wrongful loss or damage to complainant doubtful — No mischief held committed — Conviction set aside. AIR 1955 NUC (Tripura) 5114.

——S. 425 — Ingredients of offence — Mere negligence is not enough.

The gist of the offence under S. 425 lies in the intention or knowledge to cause wrongful loss or damage. Hence, mere neglect or carelessness on the part of the person in charge of the cattle to keep them from straying into the field of others is not sufficient to bring home the offence of mischief against him. 1953 Cr LJ 1460: AIR 1953 Tripura 7 (2) (8) (Prs 3, 4).

2. Knowledge.

——S. 425 — Intention and knowledge.

The accused must certainly be imputed the knowledge that when he was driving a heavy vehicle like a lorry with hopelessly poor lights, he is likely to cause wrongful loss or damage to any person, though there could be no intention to cause wrongful loss or damage to any person. 1956 Andhra WR 784: 1957 Cri LJ 627: AIR 1957 AP 100 (101) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

——Ss. 425 and 428 — Applicability — Knowledge of likelihood of causing wrongful loss or damage is sufficient for offence of mischief — Accused giving blows to animal — He has such knowledge. AIR 1955 NUC (Madh Bha) 5930.

——S. 425 — Ingredients of offence — Knowledge and intention.

A person commits mischief if he causes destruction of property knowing that he is likely to cause wrongful loss or damage to the public or any person even if an intention to cause that damage is not made out. AIR 1934 Pat 221, Rel. on.

Where the accused persons allowed their three elephants to damage the complainant's sugar-cane crop on a number of dates and these elephants were allowed to cause extensive damage as no ropes (as is generally placed) were fastened round the legs of the elephants in spite of the fact that they were duly informed of the occurrence:

Held, that the accused knew that the elephants would cause wrongful loss to the complainant and even then they allowed their elephants to continue to cause damage to the complainant's sugar-cane crop on a number of dates and hence they committed mischief within the meaning of S. 425. 1955 Cr LJ 736: AIR 1955 Tripura 1 (2) (Prs 6, 7).

3. Wrongful loss or damage.

——Ss. 425, 427, 323 — Applicability — Loss or damage to property — Meaning of.

In order to maintain a conviction under Section 425, I. P. Code, it is necessary that the loss or damage must be due to any act of the accused which causes destruction of the property itself by reducing its value or ulility.

Thus where the accused was alleged to have cut and taken away the sugar-cane crop of the complainant and when she protested about it, the accused beat her and her nephew and the accused was, on these facts, convicted under Section 427 and S. 323, I. P. Code.

Held, that though the accused caused wrongful loss or damage to the complainant when he removed the sugarcane crop which belonged to her, it could not be said that this loss or damage was caused to her due to the destruction or damage of the sugar-cane crop itself. The mere cutting of the sugar-cane crop, which was ripe, did not amount to any mischief to the crop in the sense contemplated in S. 425, I. P. Code and hence the conviction under S. 427 could not be maintained. 1958 All WR (HC) 280: 1958 All Cr R 228: 1957 Cr LJ 702: AIR 1957 All 405 (406) (Pr 4).

——Ss. 425 and 429 — Applicability — Killing of rhinoceros in forest — Offence.

The various animals enumerated in S. 429 are all domestic animals. A rhinoceros cannot in any sense of the term be described as a domestic animal, though sometimes in rare cases it may get domesticated. The words 'or any other animal' in the section should refer to animals of the same kind or class, ejusdem generis, that is to say to domestic animals, and not to wild animals. 'Mischief' is an essential ingredient of the section. Where, therefore, no one has any property or right in an animal, the killing of that animal does not come within the meaning of S. 425, and thus the provisions of S. 429 will not be attracted, where the accused kills a rhinoceros in a forest. ——S. 425 — Mischief — Essentials — Appeal against acquittal — Interference — Criminal P. C. Section 417.

The offence of mischief as defined in S. 425, Penal Code, relates not merely to intention but also to the knowledge of the likelihood of wrongful loss being caused. It is enough if the accused knew that by blocking the channel through which the complainant had a right to take water for his land, wrongful loss would be caused to the complainant. Once this is established the co-existence of a civil remedy really does not make any difference.

Interference with an acquittal would be justified only for substantial and compelling reasons evident from the record. (1961) 1 MLJ 372: 1961 MLJ (Cr) 273: 1961 All WR (Supp) 14: 1961 All Cr R 151: 1961 (2) Cr LJ 501.

——S. 425 — Mischief — What constitutes — Motive of accused to benefit himself — It is no answer to a charge of mischief to plead that the motive of the accused was to benefit himself and not to injure other, if he knew that he could only secure that benefit by causing wrongful loss to another. AIR 1960 Mad 240 (243) (Pt C) (Prs 8, 10) (DB).

——Ss. 425, 429 — Wrongful loss — Accused charged under S. 429 for having killed a Brahmain bull — Bull dedicated to Lord Mahadeb by its previous owner but even after dedication owner paying for its maintenance — Hence bull could not be held to be res nullius. (1960) 2 OJD 110: 26 Cut LT 342.

4. Destruction or change.

——S. 425 — Complainant having right to pass sullage water from his house through underground drain passing underneath the land of accused — Accused obstructing flow of water by blocking up the drain — Act amounts to mischief.

The sullage water from the complainant's house passed, from time immemorial, through an underground drain which ran underneath the land of the accused. The accused blocked the drain and obstructed the flow of water from complainant's house.

Held, that a drain was property and the act of the accused in blocking it amounted to causing a change in the drain or in its situation so as to destroy its utility to the complainant. The act of the accused, therefore, clearly amounted to mischief within S. 425, I. P. Code. 1967 Cri LJ 1227: (1965) 2 Andh LT 345.

——S. 425 — Essentials of offence — Complainant in possession of fallow land covered with babla trees — Accused ploughing and sowing it — If commits mischief.

To constitute an offence of mischief within Section 425, I. P. Code, there must be the intent or knowledge on the part of the person concerned to cause wrongful loss or damage. There must be either destruction of the property or some change in the property or in its situation which has the effect of destroying or diminishing its value or utility, or in any event, the property must be injuriously affected.

Where the accused ploughed and sowed the fallow land covered with babla trees in the possession of the complainant:

Held, that though the act of the accused might be unlawful, it did not constitute the offence of mischief. 61 Cal WN 404: 1957 Cr LJ 719: 1957 All WR (Sup) 50: AIR 1957 Cal 385 (386) (Pt B) (Prs 5, 6).

——S. 425 — Mischief — Owner of land if has right to destroy property of the trespasser.

Even if the owner of the land has a right to eject the trespasser he has no right to destroy whatever property of the trespasser the owner may find on the land. Therefore, in this case the act of demolition of a basement constructed in the property would amount to an offence of mischief. 1964 Ker LT 757: 1964 Ker LJ 1036: (1964) 2 Ker LR 97: (1964) MLJ (Cr) 617.

——Ss. 425 and 426 — Electricity cut off due to deliberate non-payment of electricity dues by landlord — Landlord not guilty of 'mischief' or abetment of 'mischief'.

If a landlord fails to pay electricity dues, even assuming that the failure is deliberate, and thereby causes a situation in which the Madras Electricity Supply Corporation is constrained to cut off electricity supply to the tenants, the landlord would certainly not be committing mischief as defined in S. 425, of the Penal Code. He may be committing a tort and may also be contravening S. 17 (1), of the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1960, which is punishable under S. 33 (1), of that Act. But the act of the Electricity Corporation is not an act of destruction to property or causing illegal change in the property, as it has a right to cut off supply of electricity for non-payment of electricity dues. Thus the landlord cannot even be convicted of abetment of mischief committed by another. ILR (1964) 2 Mad 357: 77 Mad LW 309: (1965) 1 MLJ 347: 1965 MLJ (Cr) 194.

7. Destruction of one's own property.

——S. 425, Explanation 2 — U. P. Coal Control Order (1959), Cl. 6 — Coal-stock allotted to one partner frozen by Authority and given in custody of other partner — When without written authority from State Coal Controller the other partner transfers coal, his act amounts to fraudulent or dishonest disposal of coal and mischief within S. 425 — Offence under S. 425 can very well be committed against one's own property — U. 8. Master's liability for servant's negligence.

——S. 425 — Master's liability for servant's negligence — Owner of cattle not liable for mischief.

Where cattle sent for grazing under the supervision of a cowherd strayed into the complainants' field due to the negligence and carelessness of the cowherd the owner of cattle cannot be held to have any intention to cause damage and knowledge that his cattle were likely to cause damage. In the case of mischief, the master cannot be held vicariously liable for any damage caused by the conduct of his servant. 1963 (2) Cr LJ 112 (Tri).

9. Mischief and theft.

——Ss. 425, 426 and 378 — Applicability — Person harvesting green crops grown by another person on his land — Offence.

Where A harvests green paddy crops grown by on his land, A commits the offence of mischief punishable under S. 426. Although theft may have been committed in respect of the crops which are actually harvested and taken away, a change is caused in the land itself whereby its produce is completely taken away and the value of the produce is lost. It is noteworthy that the offence of mischief is not committed in respect of immovable property only as the offence of theft is committed, but it may be committed in respect of immovable property also. ——Ss. 425 and 429 — Intention — Proof.

Where the truck of the accused struck the buffalo of the complainant accidently which, as a result fell down and died of injury: Held that in the absence of evidence to show that the accused intended to cause wrongful loss or damage or he knew that he was likely to cause them to the complainant the accused could not be held guilty of the offence of the mischief. AIR 1958 Raj 347.

(Penal Code (1860), S. 426.)

1. Scope and applicability.
2. Evidence and proof.
3. Practice and procedure.
4. Conviction and sentence.

1. Scope and applicability.

——Ss. 426, 447, 352 — Possession — Nature of — For the purposes of conviction under Ss. 426, 447 and 352, I. P. C., if the complainant alleges his possession and if he succeeds in establishing it he would succeed in establishing the commission of the offence under S. 447, I. P. C. It is not necessary for the Court to hold that the land really belonged to the complainant. 1954 All LJ 232: 1954 All WR (HC) 284: 1954 Cr LJ 1408: AIR 1954 All 650 (650) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

——S. 426 — Easement — Interference and obstruction by servient owner — Offence — Rights of dominant owner.

Where a dominant owner goes beyond the rights conferred by S. 24 read with S. 36, Easements Act, and removes direct obstruction to the easement of light and air wilfully and wrongfully placed by servient owner his action in removing the obstruction would amount to mischief under S. 426, I. ——S. 426 — Criminal trespass on land — Intention to commit an offence or to insult by entry on land — Proof — Bona fide claim or right — Entry does not become criminal. See Penal Code (1860), S. 447. (1962) 28 Cut LT 375.

——Ss. 426, 441, 447, 425, 109 — Criminal trespass and mischief — Intention — Abetment.

Where the accused instructed her maternal uncle to raise the roof which necessitated the complainant's eaves and entering upon his property, the accused must be deemed to have intended to cause annoyance and wrongful loss to the complainant within the meaning of S. 426 and, therefore, to have abetted the offences of criminal trespass and mischief. 1953 Cri LJ 881: AIR 1953 Sau 81 (DB).

——Ss. 426 and 429 — Ingredients of offence.

The three points which the prosecution has to prove in a case under S. 426 are: (1) the intention or knowledge of likelihood to cause wrongful loss or damage to the public or to any person, (2) causing the destruction of some property or any change in it or in its situation and (3) such change must destroy or diminish its value or utility or affect it injuriously. To constitute an offence under S. 426, it is not necessary that the animal should be destroyed or its value or utility diminished; it is sufficient if it is affected injuriously. If permanent injury had been caused to the animal the offence would be under S. 429. 1959 Ker LJ 722: 1959 Ker LT 765: 1959 Mad LJ (Cr) 636: ILR (1959) Ker 881: 1960 Cr LJ 228: AIR 1960 Ker 74 (74) (Pr 2).

——S. 426 — Persons, more than five, moving about in demonstration and shouting slogans against English signboards — Some of them tarring the boards and writing new legends on them — Those who did not actually do this but only stood by and formed a part of demonstrating assembly held also guilty under S. 143 read with S. 426 — Boards suffer decrease in utility by substituting English legends — Utility for the purposes of S. 425 is utility as conceived by the accused. See Penal Code (1860), S. 143. 1962 (2) Cri LJ 692 (Madh Pra).

——Ss. 426 and 427 — No evidence of intention or knowledge — Offence.

Where from the evidence the intention or the necessary knowledge on the part of the accused as to the likelihood of any loss or damage does not appear to have been proved nor is there any evidence as to the exact value of the property which is alleged to have been damaged, the case cannot come either under S. 426 or under Section 427.

Where the prosecution failed to prove that the accused had any intention of causing loss to the complainant and what they did in cutting and removing the boundary ridge was under a mistaken impression that they had a claim to do so as of right and they were convicted and sentenced by the Magistrate under S. 427:

Held, that the conviction and sentence could not be maintained. (1959) 1 OJD 19: (1959) 25 Cut LT 80.

——S. 426 — Right to complain — Co-owner of joint property — Complaint against joint owner — Competency.

A complaint of mischief under S. 426, I. P. Code, may be filed by a co-owner of joint property against another, if the accused has caused wilful damage, even though the latter be a joint owner and the complainant be not in actual possession of the property in dispute. It is for the opposite party to show that there was no damage and that there was no wrongful intention but that is only at a later stage. AIR 1951 VP 1 (2) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

——Ss. 426 and 427 — Applicability — Duty of Court — Omission to determine amount of damage — Effect.

A Magistrate cannot simply observe that the amount of loss mentioned in the first information report is inflated and proceed to convict the accused under S. 427, I. P. Code. It is imperative for him to determine the amount of damages or loss alleged to have been caused. The punishment under S. 427 cannot be justified in the absence of a clear finding of the extent of loss or damage. This omission, however, does not render the judgment invalid. The conviction under Section 427 can be altered to one under S. 426, I. P. Code. 1955 BLJR 608: 1957 Cr LJ 149 (Pat).

——Ss. 426 — Conviction — Sustainability — No definite finding — Effect.

Where in a trial of an offence under S. 425, the judgment of trial Court does not show that the Court was satisfied as to under which of the various alternatives given in that section the case against the accused could come, where it had only quoted the section and held that they were guilty either under one alternative or the other, the finding is not sufficient to convict the accused. 1954 Cr LJ 998: 1954 BLJR 31: AIR 1954 Pat 309 (310) (Pt B) (Pr 7).

——S. 427 — Bona fide claim of right — The complainant's house encroached upon a tiny bit of land belonging to the accused. The parties had been in dispute regarding their boundary wall between their adjoining plots. The accused in the bona fide belief that the encroched portion belonged to them demolished it and took away the material.

Held, that in the absence of proof of criminal intent, however, reprehensible or high-handed their action might have been, the accused could not be convicted under Sections 379 and 427. 16 Cut LT 78: 51 Cri LJ 1333: AIR 1950 Orissa 196 (197) (Pr 5).

——Ss. 427, 489 — Applicability — Copyright in books — Offence as to.

An agreement was arrived at between the complainant on the one part and of Messrs. Better Books Co., Patna, on the other part, of which the accused was a partner and by that agreement the complainant assigned the copyright of his works to Messrs. Better Books Company. Under the agreement to copyright of the works would be the property of the publishers. The publishers were free to get those works revised, enlarged or improved by anyone they desired but at their own expense The complaint was that the accused fraudulently and dishonestly removed the author's name from the works. The grievance was that he entrusted the books and their copyrights to the accused on the understanding given by the latter that the accused would never tamper with the books or their copyrights and that their copyrights would return to the complainant after the period prescribed by law.

Held, that (1) there was no allegation that the works of the author published in the books, even if it was conceded for a moment that the works still remained his property, had anyway destroyed that property or that any change had been brought about in those works which had destroyed or diminished its value. Hence the charge under Section 427 of the Penal Code could not stand.

(2) Section 489 is applicable only to corporeal property. In this case the property, which was corporeal, was the book wherein the works of the complainant under the terms of the agreement had been published. The name of the author by itself even if present on the title page, could not be called the property mark of those books. The removal of the name of the author from the books could not therefore constitute an offence under Section 489. Thus the charge under Section 489 of the Penal Code as well could not stand in law. Possession by the accused of the land in which the land-marks were situated will not be a sufficient defence in a case where the ingredients of the offence under Section 434 are made out. Where the stones were fixed by the Revenue Supervisor after he measured the plot and the accused removed these stones from where they were placed by the supervisor, moving survey stones from their proper place will result in the diminution of their usefulness as land-marks duly fixed. Where it was the complainant who bore the expenses of having the land surveyed and its boundaries demarcated by survey stones, any removal of these stones will entail loss to him at least to the extent of repeating the whole process once again. The accused cannot escape liability under Section 434 by claiming that the

Consequently, where due to the mischief of the accused a thatched roof is destroyed by fire and a horse tied therein is badly burnt with the result that it was incapacitated and unfit for work for some days the correct measure of damage to property is the extent of loss suffered by the owner, viz. the cost of replacement of the thatched roof, the cost of treatment of the horse and also the loss of income during the period the horse was incapacitated. 1951 All LJ 558: 1951 All WR (HC) 651: 1951 All Cri R 170: 1952 Cri LJ 299: AIR 1952 All 146 (147) (Pt A) (Prs 6 to 8).

——Ss. 436 and 435 — Applicability — Building, meaning of.

A structure made of straw and not of bricks and mortar may be considered a building if it has got the necessary furnishings needed for a building, such as doors, bars, etc. An ordinary double-thatched shed resting on bamboos or wooden or brick pillars having no doors etc., cannot be treated as a building within the meaning of that term used in Section 436, Penal Code. The building referred to in the section is a building which can be used as a place of worship or as a human dwelling or as a place for the custody of property. The word "custody" is undoubtedly different from the word "keeping" and it implies a sense of security which would be wanting in the case of a shed, which is only meant to provide shelter from sun and rain and which has no doors etc., consequently, where a thatched shed for tethering horses is destroyed by fire due to mischief, the offence falls under Section 435 and not under Section 436, Penal Code. 1951 All LJ 558: 1951 All WR (HC) 651: 1951 All Cri R 170: 1952 Cri LJ 299: AIR 1952 All 146 (147) (Pt B) (Pr 9).

——Ss. 441, 447 — Scope — (Municipalities — Madras District Municipalities Act (5 of 1920), S. 127) — Distinction.

An offence under Section 447 is a distinct offence from the offence contemplated by Section 127 of the Madras District Municipalities Act. Whereas mere entry in the premises connected with water-supply is an offence under Section 127, under S. 441, I. P. Code intention of such person to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of such property is the governing factor. AIR 1955 NUC (Andhra) 3623.

——Ss. 441 and 447 — Applicability — Continued possession of area cannot invoke provisions of sections. AIR 1955 NUC (Assam) 4210.

——Ss. 441, 447, 448 — Criminal trespass — Ingredients — What matters is intention to commit offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of property and what actually takes place or does not happen is not directly relevant.

To constitute an offence under S. 441, I. P. C. what matters is the intention to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of such property, as laid down in Section 441, I. P. C. What actually takes place or does not happen is not directly relevant. It cannot, therefore, be contended that because the complainant was not present, there could be no question of causing any annoyance to the complainant. Actual possession does not necessarily connote physical presence of the person in possession. If that were so, any criminal with impunity would break into a shop room during night when it has to be closed, without incurring the offence of trespass. Similarly, an owner, absent from his house or flat for a few minutes or a few hours, would find himself ousted. The concept of possession is not a fixed one. It varies according to circumstances, time, place, nature, of the thing, opportunity or circumstances of the owner and various other factors. AIR 1957 Cal 385 and 53 CWN 402, Ref.; 85 CLJ 200, Rel. on; 12 CWN 269 and 53 CWN 822, Disting. ILR (1962) 1 Cal 82.

——Ss. 441 and 447 — Ingredients of offence — Intention and knowledge.

In order that a conviction may properly be had upon a charge of offence of criminal trespass, there has to be a finding based upon evidence to the effect that the act of trespass was committed either with intent to commit an offence or with intent to intimidate, insult or annoy any person. It is further necessary that the intent to annoy or intimidate cannot be in respect of any and every person connected with the property, but with respect only to the person in actual possession of such property. If, therefore, the complainant was not present to be intimidated, insulted or annoyed, there could be no conviction unless it could be found upon evidence that there was intent to commit an offence.

Mere knowledge on the part of the accused that the result of their act is likely to cause annoyance or insult or intimidation to the complainant, is wholly insufficient to sustain a charge under S. 447. That section does not speak of knowledge. It would be utterly wrong to import the element of knowledge into S. 441 of the Indian Penal Code. 1957 Cr LJ 719: 1957 All WR (Sup) 50: 61 Cal WN 404: AIR 1957 Cal 385 (386) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5, 8).

——S. 441 — Scope — Unlawful entry with or without necessary intent followed by unlawful remaining — Such cases, if covered by section.

Whether there is unlawful entry without the necessary intent followed by unlawful remaining with one of the intentions prescribed or unlawful entry with the necessary intent followed by unlawful remaining also with the necessary intent, neither type of case is covered by plain words of Section 441 plainly interpreted. Whether such cases should be made punishable or not is a matter for the Legislature. AIR 1928 Pat 124 and AIR 1933 All 816, Dissent. from. ILR (1952) 1 Cal 105: AIR 1951 Cal 297 (298) (Pr 11).

——S. 441 — Hyderabad Penal Code, S. 371 — Essentials of offence — Re-entry upon land by person dispossessed by legal process in execution — Offence — Presumption of criminal intent.

To constitute the offence of criminal trespass under Section 371, Hyderabad Penal Code, there must be proof of an intention to commit an offence, or to intimidate, insult or annoy the person in possession or occupation of the property trespassed upon. The essence of the offence is the criminal intent to do one or other of the acts specified, and it is for the prosecution to prove that intent. The intent has to be gathered from the conduct of the accused or the circumstances of the case. It is sufficient to show that the accused must have known that his act would, as one of its inevitable incidents, cause annoyance. Re-entry into land from which the accused has been ejected by civil process (execution of decree) or of which possession has been given to another would raise a presumption that such entry was with intent to intimidate or annoy within the meaning of S. 371, Hyderabad Penal Code. When a person enters without any legal justification upon property in the established possession of another, it must be inferred that he has an intention to annoy the person in possession. 12 PR (Cr) 1906; 32 Dec LR 228; 35 Dec LR 173; 36 Dec LR 7, Foll. 1952 Cr LJ 505: ILR (1952) Hyd 326: AIR 1952 Hyd 50 (50, 51) (Prs 3, 5, 10) (DB).

——S. 441 — Applicability — Land alleged to be given to father of accused by municipality — Accused asserting long possession — Accused erecting tinshed over disputed land — No criminal trespass. AIR 1955 NUC (Madh B) 2406.

——Ss. 441 and 447 — 'Possession' — Meaning of.

Possession contemplated under Section 441 must be actual physical possession, and persons, who merely have a right to graze cattle on another's land or to take fuel growing on it for their personal needs cannot be said to be in such possession or to own the property. Persons entitled to rights of easement or other incorporeal rights cannot be said to be persons in possession of the property within the definition of an offence of criminal trespass. ——Ss. 441, 447, 97 and 323 — Complainant entering into land of accused to effect repairs to fence serving as boundary between lands of both parties without intention to annoy, intimidate or insult accused — Act does not amount to criminal trespass so as to give accused right to inflict injury on complainant. AIR 1964 SC 986, Foll. ILR (1964) Cut 706.

——S. 441 — Assertion of right to occupy house — Grounds for assertion not shown — Possession of accused held not bona fide — Intention to annoy, etc., can be presumed from circumstances.

Where the accused charged under Section 448, I. P. C., assert that the property of which they took possession was the dera of the community and that they bona fide entered into possession and had no intention to annoy the person in possession, but do not show on what grounds their assertion was founded, it cannot be said that the accused acted bona fide in occupying the property in the temporary absence of the owner.

Where it is found from the circumstances that the accused committed trespass with the intention to annoy, insult or intimidate the person in possession and not that they had merely the knowledge that their act would cause annoyance to him, the accused cannot have the benefit of the view that it is not enough for the prosecution to prove or for the Court to find that the accused knew that his entry would probably annoy the person in possession, but it is absolutely essential to affirmatively establish and find that the accused acted with an intention to annoy.

The intention has in most cases to be inferred from the circumstances and where the probable consequence of the act alleged to be criminal trespass was to cause annoyance to the person in possession it will be presumed that it was committed with that intention. 2. Intention.

——Ss. 441, 448 — Actual possession of disputed premises delivered to complainant from accused tenant in execution of decree of ejectment — Re-entry by accused in absence of complainant by breaking lock — Complainant threatened by accused when former lodged protest with the latter — Held accused was guilty under S. 448.

The complainant's mother had obtained a decree for the ejectment of the accused who was her tenant. In execution of the decree the Court Amin delivered actual possession of the disputed premises to the complainant with aid of the police. The complainant put his lock on the house. On the same day when the complainant was away, the accused after breaking the lock unlawfully trespassed into the house. After the accused had broken up into the house, the complainant had gone there to lodge a protest with the accused. At that time the accused had threatened to give a beating to the complainant.

Held, that the accused had clearly committed an offence contemplated by S. 448 read with the second part of S. 441, I. P. C. The only object with which the accused could have re-entered the premises was to intimidate, insult or annoy the complainant and his mother though they were not actually present on the spot at the time of re-entry. ——Ss. 441 and 447 — Intention to constitute criminal trespass — Proof of — Presumption — Annoyance, probable consequence of act, alleged to be trespass — Intention may be presumed.

Unless the man committing criminal trespass gives expression to his intention, it would be impossible to produce direct evidence of the intention. The intention has in most cases to be inferred from the circumstances. Where the probable consequence of the act alleged to be criminal trespass was to cause annoyance to the persons in possession it will be presumed that it was committed with that intention. [Overruled in AIR 1964 SC 986.]

——Ss. 441, 442 and 448 — Criminal trespass— Intention to insult — Accused, an office-bearer of School Committee going to school beating two boys in absence of Head Master and subsequently abusing Head Master on his return — Accused held guilty under S. 448.

The accused, a vice-chairman of a school Committee, came into the school while the Head Master was absent, beat two of the boys who had quarrelled with and beat his nephew learning in the same school. When the Head Master returned to the school and learnt about the incident he reprimanded the accused who was still there, that as a respectable person he should not have trespassed in the school and beaten the boys. The accused was incensed at this, and he started abusing the Head Master and tried to catch hold of his shirt and was about to use physical force. The Head Master pushed back the accused and the accused went away abusing. He also threatened the Head Master physical harm as soon as he came out of the school.

Held, that even though the accused may have the right to go into the school to make inquiries, his continuance there was certainly with the avowed object of chastising the Head Master which he demonstrated by starting abuses and preparation to use physical force. This was clear evidence of the accused having the criminal intention which makes the trespass a criminal trespass within the meaning of Ss. 441 and 442, I. P. Code. It would be impossible for the head of an educational institution to carry on effectively his duties if the parents or guardians or even any office-bearers connected with the management of the school were to be permitted to trespass in the premises of the school not only to humiliate the teachers in the presence of boys but also to indulge in abuses and use of physical force in supposed exercise of their right. There is no such right. The conviction of accused under S. 448, I. P. Code was, therefore, proper. 65 Bom LR 477: 1963 Mah LJ 690: ILR (1963) Bom 627: 1964 (1) Cr LJ 395: AIR 1964 Bom 82 (83) (Prs 4, 5).

Intention which is a state of mind, can never be proved as a fact: it can only be inferred from facts which are proved. It may well be that in doing a particular act man may have more intentions than one. ——S. 441 — Intention — Proof.

In order to constitute criminal trespass, the prosecution must prove that the accused had the intention to intimidate, insult or annoy when he made the entry. A mere knowledge that the trespass is likely to cause insult or annoyance does not amount to an intent to insult or annoy within S. 441. Where certain persons re-occupy the lands acquired from them by the Government in the belief that the lands would be restored to them on return of the compensation money, they cannot be held guilty under S. 441 in the absence of any criminal intention as required by the section. 51 Cri LJ 821: AIR 1950 Pat 295 (296) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

Every trespass cannot be said to be a criminal trespass unless one of the intents given in Section 441 is proved.

The accused took possession of a field which was in the possession of the complainant as mortgagee, in his absence, with intent to obtain possession unlawfully and refused to make over possession of the field with a threatening attiude when the complainant demanded it back.

Held, that this did not necessarily mean that the accused intended to annoy, insult or intimidate the complainant or that in entering upon the field their intent was to commit any offence. In the absence of a clear finding to that effect the accused could not be convicted under S. 447. In such a case no question of restoration of possession of field under S. 522, Criminal P. 4. To intimidate.

——Ss. 441, 447 — Intention to intimidate or annoy — Going on hunger strike in the compound of bungalow of another to secure compliance with certain demands, is criminal trespass.

The essence of the offence of criminal trespass lies in the intention with which the trespass is committed. Forming of an intention is a mental act and direct evidence cannot be expected to be produced about it. Intention has, therefore, to be inferred from admitted or proved facts and the question with what particular intention a person trespassed on the property in the possession of another must necessarily depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. Two things however, appear to be well settled in this connection. The first is that the intention contemplated by section 441, I. P. C. is the primary intention and not the secondary or subsidiary intention of the trespasser. The other is that knowledge is not identical with intention.

The accused felt aggrieved at the conduct of the police. They thought that the police, had without any justification, assaulted one H at first, and when on their intervention he had been admitted into the Hospital they had got him removed from there. The accused had two demands which they wanted the Superintendent of Police to fulfil. In the first place they wanted H to be readmitted into the Hospital immediately. They also wanted the police officials concerned to be adequately punished. On the 3rd February 1955 at 10 a.m. one of the accused entered the compound of the bungalow of the Superintendent of Police, and took his seat in the visitors' shed and started his hunger strike, the other accused accompanied him and they too took their seats in the same shed.

Held, that though professedly the hunger strike was undertaken for self-purification at the bidding of the inner voice its real purpose was to compel the Superintendent of police to fulfill the two demands which the accused was making. The trespass which was being committed by the accused was being committed with the intention of intimidating and annoying the Superintendent of police on whose property the accused were trespassing. AIR 1938 Lah 574, Dist. 1958 All LJ 600: 1958 All WR 695: 1958 All Cr R 468.

——S. 441 — Applicability — Essentials — Person in constructive possession — Annoyance or insult, etc. to — Offence.

The intent to annoy and intimidate must be not with respect to any and every person conected with the property but with respect to any person in actual possession of such property. A person in constructive possession is not contemplated by S. 441. Further, a mere knowledge on the part of the accused that the result of their act is likely to cause annoyance or insult or intimidation to the complainant is sufficent to sustain a charge of trespass. The section speaks not of knowledge but of intention. AIR 1949 Cal 107 and AIR 1957 Cal 385, Foll. 1960 Cr LJ 342: AIR 1960 Cal 189 (190) (Pr 8).

——Ss. 441, 448 — Applicability — Criminal intention — Proof — Inference.

The accused entered the house of the complainant during the temporary absence of the complainant and when he went and remonstrated they chased him out with lathis.

Held, that when the accused chased out the complainant with lathis when he objected to their remaining in occupation of the house they clearly intimidated him and consequently when they continued to remain in the house with the criminal intention of intimidating him, the ingredients of S. 441, I. P. Code could be said to have been established. (1957) 23 Cut LT 157.

5. To annoy.

● ——S. 441 — Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, Rr. 24, 25 — Scope — Execution of decree to be completed by date specified on process for this purpose — Warrants for delivery of possession cease to be executable after expiry of date fixed for execution — Persons going on land for taking delivery with such warrants held did not commit criminal trespass in the absence of intention to annoy.

If O. 21, R. 25, Civil P. C., be read as a whole and in the light of the provisions in sub-rule (3) of R. 24 it is quite clear that the delay mentioned in R. 25 refers to the delay in returning the process whether after or without execution and not to any delay in execution. The words in sub-rule (3) of R. 24 clearly show the intention of the legislature that the execution must be completed by the date specified on the process for this purpose. Where the last date for execution of the warrants for delivery of possession was some time in April 1960, they were not executable in law on 7th June 1960. ILR 10 Cal 18 and AIR 1942 Pat 480 and AIR 1924 Nag 68 and AIR 1934 All 1016, Rel. on. The ultimate question for decision being whether an act was done with a particular intention all the circumstances including the natural consequence of the action have to be taken into consideration. It is legitimate to think also that when S. 441, Penal Code, speaks of entering on property with intent to commit an offence, or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of the property it speaks of the main intention in the action and not any subsidiary intention that may also be present. In order to establish that the entry on the property was with the intent to annoy, intimidate or insult it is necessary for the Court to be satisfied that causing such annoyance, intimidation or insult was the aim of the entry; that it is not sufficient for that purpose to show merely that the natural consequence of the entry was likely to be annoyance, intimidation or insult, and that this likely consequence was known to the persons entering; that in deciding whether the aim of the entry was the causing of such annoyance, intimidation or insult the Court has to consider all the relevant circumstances including the presence of knowledge that its natural consequences would be such annoyance, intimidation or insult and including also the probability of something else than the causing of such intimidation, insult or annoyance, being the dominant intention which prompted the entry. Thus where certain persons were armed with warrants of execution for delivery of possession though the date for execution of the warrants had expired, it might be that they knew that annoyance would result when they went on the land for taking possession; still it was reasonable to think that the intention which prompted and dominated their action was to execute the warrants. Further the persons could not be reasonably expected to know that the warrants had ceased to be executable in law. Taking the circumstances into consideration it was proper to hold that criminal trespass was not committed or apprehended from the acts of such persons. ——S. 441 — "To annoy".

The annoyance which is spoken of in S. 441, I. P. Code, is not intended to be instantaneous, that is, at the moment of entry. It may happen subsequently. ——S. 441 — Dominant intention — Meeting held in S. D. O.'s office premises for canvassing for Election through propaganda — Case does not come within mischief of section.

It has first to be established under S. 441, Penal Code, that the property was in fact in the possession of the aggrieved person. In order to establish that the entry on the property was with the intent to annoy, intimidate or insult, it is necessary for the Court to be satisfied that causing such annoyance, intimidation or insult was the main aim of the entry: that it was not sufficient for that purpose to show merely that the natural consequence of the entry was likely to be annoyance, intimidation or insult and that this likely consequence was known to the persons entering, that in deciding whether the aim of the entry was the causing of such annoyance, intimidation or insult, the Court has to consider all the relevant circumstances including the presence of knowledge that its natural consequence would be such annoyance, intimidation or insult including also the probability of something else than the causing of such intimidation, insult or annoyance, being the dominant intention which prompted the entry. AIR 1964 SC 986. Foll.

Thus where the object of the meeting, which was held inside the area set apart for the office compound of the Sub-Divisional Officer, was not to cause any annoyance to the S. D. O. or his staff but it was only to carry on canvassing for the election though propaganda, the case does not come within the mischief of S. 441, Penal Code, the object of the persons could not be said to cause annoyance to them, as their dominant intention was something else then causing annoyance. ILR (1965) Cut 71: 1966 Cri LJ 849 (850) (Prs 6, 7) (Orissa).

There is nothing in S. 441 which requires that the intimidation, insult or annoyance, which is caused to the person in possession of a property as a result of the entry upon that property, should be instantaneous and confined only to the moment of entry and not caused subsequent to the entry. All that the section requires is that the accused should make the entry with the intention to insult, intimidate or annoy the person in possession and it is immaterial that the actual intimidation, insult or annoyance is caused not at the time of the entry but subsequently. To hold that criminal trespass implies an instantaneous intimidation, insult or annoyance upon the entry into possession of a property, would be going not only against the plain language of the section but would also lead to state of lawlessness and highhanded activities. Mere temporary absence of the person in possession would not make any difference if the other ingredients of the offence of criminal trespass are established.

Where a landlord broke open the lock of the house in the possession of his tenant in his absence, and took possession of the same it must have been obvious to the land-lord that his act in breaking open the lock of the property in possession of the tenant must cause annoyance to him, and as a man is presumed to intend the consequences of his act it follows that the petitioner must have intended to cause annoyance to the tenant. Although it may be correct that the object of the petitioner was to take possession of the house in question, his act shows that his intention was to cause annoyance to the tenant. The landlord would be guilty of an offence under S. 448. AIR 1954 All 67 and AIR 1945 All 26,

6. Bona fide claim of right.

●——S. 441 — Ceylon Penal Code, S. 427 — Applicability — Criminal trespass — What constitutes — Entry under bona fide claim of right.

S. 427, Ceylon Penal Code does not make every trespass a criminal offence. It is confined to cases in which the trespass is committed with a particular intention and the intention specified indicates that the class of trespass be brought within criminal law is one calculated to cause a breach of the peace. The section deals with occupation, which is a matter of fact, and not with possession, which may be actual or constructive and may involve matters of law. The first paragraph of the section comes into operation when a trespasser enters land in the occupation of another with the intent specified, and the second paragraph applies when the entry is lawful but becomes unlawful, e.g., when the entry is made on the invitation of the occupier and there is a refusal to leave when the invitation is withdrawn. But in either case there must be an occupier whose occupation is interfered with, and whom it is intended to insult, intimidate or annoy (unless the intent is to commit an offence). The section has no application where the fact of occupation is consistent, the only change being in its character, as where a tenant holds over after the expiration of his tenancy.

Entry upon land, made under a bona fide claim of right however ill-founded in law the claim may be, does not become criminal merely because a foreseen consequence of the entry is annoyance to the occupant. To establish criminal trespass the prosecution must prove that the real or dominant intent of the entry was to commit an offence or to insult, intimidate or annoy the occupant and that any claim of right was a mere cloak to cover the real intent, or at any rate constituted no more than a subsidiary intent. Sinnasamy Selvanayagam v. The King, 52 Cri LJ 173: 55 CWN 1 (PC).

——S. 441 — Person in peaceful possession of property for long time — Resort to force by claimant to eject such person.

Section 441 is designed to protect possession as distinguished from title in the sense that the question in whom title to the land or propery vests is foreign to the offence. The mere fact that the accused put forward a bona fide claim to the property would not save him from the consequence of the entry into the house in possession of the complainant if his intention was to take the property out of the complainant's possession without his consent and to cause wrongful gain to himself or wrongful loss to him. Therefore, when a person has been in peaceful possession of property for a fairly long time, it is not open to the claimant of the property to resort to force for the purpose of ejecting him. 51 Cr LJ 1167, Foll. 1952 All Cr R 93: 1952 All WR (HC) 337: 1953 Cri LJ 1664: AIR 1953 All 725 (726) (Pt B) (Pr 6).

——Ss. 441, 451 — Bona fide claim by accused — Acquittal — Interference in revision — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 439.

The sections which follow S. 441 in Ch. XVII are designed to protect possession as distinguished from title in the sense that the question in whom title to the land or property vests is foreign to the offence. The mere fact that the accused put forward a bona fide claim to the property would not save him from the consequences of the entry into the house in possession of the complainant if his intention was to take the property out of the complainant's possession without her consent and to cause wrongful gain to himself or wrongful loss to her. Where the lower Court acquits the accused in such a case the High Court in revision will set aside the acquittal. 51 Cri LJ 1167: AIR 1950 All 653 (654, 655) (Prs 5, 6).

——Ss. 441, 447 — Applicability.

The accused claimed the field, in which the trespass was said to have been committed, as an occupant on the basis of a sale from the original occupant while the complainant was mere subtenant (Shikmi holder) of the latter for the previous year.

Held, that the question arose as to who was in possession and whether the accused claimed a bona fide right on his own behalf. That being so, the case was, therefore, of a civil nature and secondly the accused could not be held to have intention to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy the complainant and no offence under S. 447 could be held to have been committed by him. 1954 Cr LJ 394: AIR 1954 Bhopal 6 (7) (Pt B) (Pr 10).

——S. 441 — Bona fide claim of right.

The mere assertion of a claim of right is not sufficient defence to a charge of criminal trespass; to be a good defence it must be a claim made in good faith; that is to say, it must be a claim in which the person must have himself believed that it cannot be legally untenable. ILR (1952) Hyd 334: 1952 Cri LJ 343: AIR 1952 Hyd 38 (38) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

——Ss. 441 and 447 — Bona fide claim of right — Law as to — Adjudication by Civil Court — Effect.

The law is that the lawful owner of land of which another is in possession without right, may enter on it provided he is entitled by law to enter and can do so peaceably. Even he cannot effect such entrance with a strong hand or a multitude of people. In order to sustain such entry, the person effecting it must have something more effective than a mere claim to the property. It is the duty of the criminal Court to determine what was the intention of the alleged offender and if it is found that he was not acting in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right, then it cannot refuse to convict the offender assuming of course that other facts are established which constitute the offence.

Where a dispute between the parties has been adjudicated upon by the Civil Court and possession has been given under a decree of Civil Court, it cannot be stated that the re-entry sought to be effected by the defeated judgment debtor subsequently would amount to a bona fide claim of right. It is well settled that the Magisrate should not refuse to recognise the effect of prior procedings in Civil Court. It is his duty to maintain the Civil Court's decree and support the possession given by it against force or show of force. 1959 Mad WN 222.

——Ss. 441 and 447 — Criminal trespass — Assertion of claim or right.

A person who enters upon land in the possession of another in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right cannot be convicted of criminal trespass because the entry was not made with any such intent as to constitute an offence. But mere assertion of claim of right cannot in itself be a sufficient answer to a charge of criminal trespass. 51 Cri LJ 1565: 1951 All WR (Supp) 7: AIR 1950 Pat 564 (565) (Pr 2).

——Ss. 441 and 448 — Intention — Entry under bona fide claim of right — Offence.

In a case under the section where the accused claims that he had entered under a bona fide claim of right the first thing which the Court has to see is whether the claim is bona fide; for if the claim is not bona fide and is a mere cloak to cover the real intent, it would be of no avail. It could hold the accused guilty of an offence under Section 448 only if it finds that his dominant intention was to commit an offence or insult, intimidate or annoy the person in possession. If the intention is found to be merely to make an entry peacefully no offence could be held to have been made out. The mere fact that after making an entry or during its course the accused committed an offence would not result in the conviction of the accused for criminal trespass when it was not his intention from the very beginning to commit that offence. 1959 Raj LW 270: ILR (1958) 8 Raj 904: 1958 Cr LJ 1099: AIR 1958 Raj 214 (216, 217) (Prs 11, 15) (DB).

7. Entry.

——S. 441 — Language of S. 441 has to be distinguished from that of S. 442. Going on the roof of a house does not amount to entry into a building. In a case covered by S. 442 entry must be into the building or remaining in the building. The person who is on the roof of a house cannot be said to be in the house. He is not guilty of house trespass but of committing criminal trespass under S. 447. 1951 All LJ 461.

——S. 441 — Intention — Re-entry of, after dispossession in execution.

In order to the constitution of the offence of criminal trespass there must be proof of an intention to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy the person in possession of the property. When a person enters without any legal justification upon property in the established possession of another, he must be inferred to have had an intention to annoy the person in possession. Re-entry of ejected person after execution of decree would raise a presumption that re-entry was with the intent to intimidate or annoy. Case law referred. ILR (1952) Hyd 326: 1952 Cri LJ 505: AIR 1952 Hyd 50 (50, 51) (Prs 3, 5, 10) (DB).

8. In the possession of another.

——S. 441 — 'In the possession of another'.

The question whether the complainant was in possession of the premises in suit or not is a question of fact. Possession of a house delivered to the complainant in execution of a decree is sufficient to show that it was he who was in peaceful possession of it and that possession he has by keeping the house locked is sufficient to attract the provisions of S. 441. AIR 1925 All 540, Explained.

The essence of the offence is the intent in committing the offence and not the presence or absence of the person against whom that intent is held. That intention 'to annoy' may be there in spite of the fact that the person against whom that intention is held may not be actually present at the time of entry. 2 All 465, Rel. on.

When the dominion which the complainant had acquired over the property with the help of the Civil Court is invaded and usurped by the accused by breaking open the lock and clandestinely entering into the house the act of the accused could not but be a source of great annoyance to the complainant and one done to anoy the complainant who was in actual possession of the premises in suit. ——S. 441 — 'In the possession of another' — Possession contemplated by section.

Section 441 clearly means and implies that a person has to be in possession of a place in the sense that he is entitled to exclude another if that other person enters the place. The attestation Officer carrying on his duties in a camp cannot conceivably be held to be in possession of it in the sense the word possession is understood in S. 441, I. P. C. The possession mentioned in S. 441 should be understood as meaning actual physical possession which includes the right to eject or exclude another person. 1956 Cri LJ 524: 97 Cal LJ 32: AIR 1956 Cal 118 (120) (Pt C) (Pr 7).

——Ss. 441 and 447 — Criminal trespass — Ingredients — Entry upon property in possession of another — Possession may be physical or constructive — Presence of owner at time of entry not essential.

To constitute an offence of criminal trespass as defined in the first part of S. 441, I. P. Code, the following essential ingredients must be satisfied: (1) Entry into or upon property in the possession of another. (2) Such entry should be with intent to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of such property. The word 'possession' as used in S. 441 is wide enough to include not only actual and physical possession but also constructive possession. Cri. Ref. No. 15 of 1960 (Him. Pra.), Rel. on; AIR 1925 All 540 and AIR 1960 Cal 189, and AIR 1942 Oudh 104, Not foll. 1962 (1) Cr LJ 31: AIR 1962 Him Pra 1 (2, 3) (Pt B) (Prs 10 to 13).

——Ss. 441, 447— "In the possession of another" — Complainant obtaining delivery of possession in execution of decree — Accused admitting such possession — Court is bound to consider effect of these facts.

Criminal Courts ought to attach due weight to delivery records. Where, besides the record of delivery showing that the complainant was put in actual possession of the property concerned, there is also an admission by the accused made in a registered lease deed that the complainant had come into possession of the property in pursuance of the delivery kychit, they cannot brush aside the admission by a bald statement that the lease deed was brought into existence fraudulently. 34 Trav LJ 292, Disting.; AIR 1953 Trav-Co 340; 1959 Ker LT 444; 1959 Ker LT 501, Rel. on. 1963 Mad LJ (Cri) 87: 1961 Ker LJ 1091: (1961) 2 Ker LR 423: 1961 Ker LT 799.

——S. 441 — Criminal trespass — Entry into house locked by another.

In order that an entry should constitute the offence of criminal trespass the property should be in actual possession of some one whom it is intended to insult or annoy. If a person is in constructive possession through a tenant, that possession is held not sufficient to constitute the offence. But if a person is himself in possession of the property which he has kept locked, entry therein would constitute the offence provided its natural and probable consequence is the annoyance of that person. 52 Cr LJ 1477: AIR 1951 Kutch 76 (77) (Pt B) (Pr 9).

10. "Unlawfully remains there".

——Ss. 441 and 442 — Unauthorised occupation of complainant's house by applicants — Applicants not vacating house in spite of notice — On facts applicants held did not commit offence of house trespass.

The complaint alleged that the applicant had wrongly occupied the house belonging to him during the time the house was under the management and control of the Custodian; that on 1-6-1962 the Rent Control Inspector came to the complainant to make an inquiry and then he (complainant) came to know that the applicants had made an application for allotment of the house; and that thereafter he served a notice, dated 22-9-1962 on the applicants, calling upon them to vacate the house by 4-10-1962. The applicants did not vacate the house.

Held, that on taking into consideration all the facts and circumstances of the case if could be said that while disregarding the notice served upon them or while continuing in occupation of the house the applicants had been guilty of the offence as laid down in Section 441, I. P. C. Their occupation did not amount to house trespass as defined in Section 442, I. P. C., and they all deserved to be discharged of the offence. In determining whether entry into a house or remaining in occupation of the house was with the guilty intention as contemplated by S. 442, I. P. C. one will have to look into not only the conduct of the accused persons but also of the complainant. 1964 All LJ 166.

Where the accused took possession of the rooms belonging to the complainant when the latter had left for another place for a short while but refused to vacate them when, on his return, the complainant asked him to vacate, the latter part of Section 441 applies and the accused is guilty under Section 448. 85 Cal LJ 200: 51 Cri LJ 1496: AIR 1950 Cal 410 (410) (Pr 4).

——S. 441 — Tenant temporarily vacating premises for purposes of repairs on request of landlord — Landlord refusing to give back possession — No evidence that landlord has any intention to intimidate, insult or annoy or to commit offence — Action of landlord though unlawful does not amount to offence under second part of S. 441.

A person charged with trespass under the second part of Section 441, Penal Code, not only must remain on the premises unlawfully but he must remain on the premises unlawfully with certain intentions, namely, the intent to intimidate, insult or annoy or to commit an offence.

Where a landlord induces his tenant to vacate the premises temporarily for the purpose of repairs and the tenant vacates them but on return of the tenant the landlord refuses to hand over possession to the tenant, the action of the landlord in remaining in possession of the premises no doubt is unlawful but unless the prosecution establishes that the landlord had remained in possession with one of the intentions mentioned in the section, he cannot be held guilty under the second part of S. 441. 51 Cri LJ 407: AIR 1950 Cal 80 (81) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

——S. 441 — Public office — Public servant in charge, whether in possession of such premises — Entry by member of public — Member asked to quit by officer-in-charge — Non-compliance by member — If criminal trespass.

A Government Officer who holds his office in a particular building allotted to him by the Government for the purpose, is in possession of it qua a member of the public who may have a right of access to it in connection with official business relating to the department with which the Government Officer concerned is connected. It is possible in law for public servant incharge of his official premises to make out a case under Section 441, Penal Code, provided the other ingredients of that section are fulfilled. Where a person, who has entered a public office, is asked to quit the same by the officer concerned, and he refuses to do so and he contumaciously remains therein with the requisite intent as prescribed in Section 441, that person cannot escape the impact of the second part of Section 441, his entry at its inception though lawful having become unlawful later. AIR 1956 Cal 118, Dissented from.

The word "possession" in Section 441 has been used in its most extensive sense meaning both 'mediate' and 'immediate' possession and no qualification whatever has been attached to it. To all intents and purposes a Government Officer who is in charge of his office building is in actual physical, immediate possession of his office premises and the possession is of a type that he may exclude poachers therefrom.

The mere right of access of a member of the public to a Government office in connection with such official business as he may have therein, does not divert the officer in charge of that office from having actual physical possession of his office building or deprive him of a right to exclude all interference with it if necessary. Entry into a public office is not entirely unregulated, and it is the officer in charge thereof who always has the right to regulate it. 1962 Raj LW 636: AIR 1963 Raj 19 (20 to 22) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

While the fact that trespass causes or is likely to cause annoyance to a person in possession may by itself be insufficient to justify a conviction for criminal trespass, the presumption of the necessary intention may be drawn where a person who has absolutely no interest in land in possession of others, forcibly takes possession in spite of the protest of the owner. 1959 Ker LJ 518: ILR (1958) Ker 1249: 1958 Ker LT 1048 (2): 1958 Mad LJ (Cr) 993: 1959 Cr LJ 588: AIR 1959 Ker 146 (148) (Pt C) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Ss. 441 and 448 — Intention — Proof — Presumption.

Section 441, Penal Code, makes the trespass criminal, if the entry is with an intent to commit an offence, and for that it is not necessary that the offence must be against the person in possession. The entry is also criminal if the intention is to intimidate, insult or annoy the person in possession. Therefore, if N who was sitting at S's house was beaten or assaulted then the case would fall under the first part, and if not beaten or assaulted, then it would fall under the second part, as in such a case such an intention must be presumed from the very object with which the entry was made; for, if a person enters the house of another with such an object then the owner is bound to be annoyed unless the owner was a consenting party to it. When the charge relates to the offence of criminal trespass, it is always desirable that the charge should specify as far as possible the intent with which the accused is alleged to have committed the offence. But the defect in the charge will not vitiate the conviction unless prejudice had been caused to the accused by the defect. Intention to annoy is usually a matter of inference from the circumstances and if the accused had notice of the circumstances sought to be relied on by the prosecution the conviction for criminal trespass will not be bad because the charge did not state that the intention of the accused was to annoy. (1961) 2 Guj LR 256.

When a person is charged with the commission of the offence of adultery with a woman or with doing an act with the intention of committing adultery with a woman, it must be strictly and definitely proved that the woman is the legally wedded wife of another. The mere evidence of the woman and her alleged husband is not sufficient. The same principle would apply to a prosecution under section 451 where the intention alleged is to commit the offence of adultery. It is however not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the accused had knowledge or had reason to believe that the complainant was the wife of another. ——S. 441 — Criminal trespass — Record of delivery by Civil Court — Criminal Courts to attach due weight to them — Pendency of civil suit whether will oust jurisdiction of criminal Court.

Where in a case the complainant was put in physical possession of the property by the civil Court and that Court actually authorised him to move the criminal Court for necessary action for further acts of trespass committed in the property, it was not open to the criminal Court to refuse to adjudicate on the criminal acts complained of for the mere reason that a civil suit in respect of the property is pending. The criminal Courts ought to attach due weight to the record of delivery in deciding whether actual possession passed under the record. The primary duty of a Court in a criminal trial is to determine whether the offence complained of is made out by the evidence produced before it. The question of civil rights is only ancillary or incidental. The criminal Court may not be competent to adjudicate on civil rights or title to the property but to say that the pendency of a civil suit will automatically oust the jurisdiction of the crimnal Court is too broad a proposition of law to meet with approval. 1964 Mad LJ Cr) 97: 1963 Ker LT 210: (1963) 2 Cri LJ 215 (216) (Prs 5, 6) (Ker).

——Ss. 442, 448 — Land given on rent by complainant to accused — Structures raised by accused over the land — Decree for arrears of rent and ejectment of accused — Households and structures removed in execution of decree and possession of land delivered to complainant — Re-entry by accused on the land whether makes him liable under S. 448 — Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 522, 423, 439.

The complainant appellant had given the land on rent to the accused respondent. The accused had raised structures on the land. Thereafter the complainant had obtained a decree against the accused for arrears of rent and for ejectment of the accused. The judgment debtor accused was absent when the commissioner went to the spot for effecting the execution of the decree. The wife of the judgment-debtor removed the household effects from the land at the instance of the commissioner and the possession was alleged to have been delivered to the complainant. When the complainant was out of station ,the accused persons were alleged to have re-entered on the land.

Held, in the circumstances that the conviction of the accused as recorded by the Magistrate was wholly misconceived because the complainant got only a formal possession of the site of hutments which continued to remain in actual possession of the respondents. Consequently the order of the Magistrate under Section 522 (1) Cr. P. C. directing the possession of the property to be restored to the complainant was also liable to be set aside. AIR 1958 All 159, Distinguished.

The delivery of possession in pursuance of the Civil Court decree could only be in respect of the open piece of land and not about the structures which were put on the same by the respondents. In view of the fact that the appellant had not obtained any decree against the respondents for their dispossession from the structures or for the demolition of the structures from the land, the Commissioner who was appointed to execute the decree had no authority in law to direct the judgment debtor or his wife to remove the structures from the premises in question and even if his wife had, under the directions of the Commissioner, removed her household effects from the premises in question that would not amount to dispossession of respondents in law from the premises and could not result in handing over the possession to the appellant. It was thus obvious that in view of the terms of the decree the appellant could not have been delivered actual physical possession over the structures or the land underneath which must be deemed to have remained in possession of the respondents. 1965 All LJ 736: 1965 All WR (HC) 590: 1965 All Cri R. 385.

——S. 442 — 'Building' — Meaning of — Gheran — Open space enclosed by walls and having exits leading to Zenani Kita — If building.

If an open space is merely surrounded by walls but is not attached to any house for use as a part of that house, it cannot be called a part of a building. But where the Gheran was enclosed by brick walls, and it had two exits both of which led into the Zenani Kita of the house for use of the inhabitants of that kita, such an enclosure must be held to be a part of the Zenani Kita, i.e., a part of the building. 1. Scope and applicability.

——Ss. 447, 352 and 426 — Applicability — Possession — Nature of.

For the purpose of convictions under Ss. 447, 352 and 426, Penal Code, if the complainant alleges his possession and if he succeeds in establishing it he would succeed in establishing the commission of the offence under S. 447, I. P. C. It is not necessary for the Court to hold that the land really belonged to the complainant. 1954 Cr LJ 1408: 1954 All WR (HC) 284: 1954 All LJ 232: AIR 1954 All 650(650) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

——Ss. 447 and 441 — Criminal trespass — Ingredients — Entry upon property in possession of another — Possession may be physical or constructive — Presence of owner at time of entry not essential. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. 1962 (1) Cri LJ 31: AIR 1962 Him Pra 1.

——S. 447 — Plea in defence — Economic necessity of accused is no defence. 1959 Ker LJ 518: 1958 Ker LT 1048 (2): 1958 Mad LJ (Cr) 993: ILR (1958) Ker 1249: 1959 Cr LJ 588: AIR 1959 Ker 146 (149) (Pt D) (Pr 15) (DB).

2. Intention.

——Ss. 447 and 441 — Intention to constitute criminal trespass — Proof of — Presumption — Annoyance, probable consequence of act, alleged to be trespass — Intention may be presumed. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. 51 Cri LJ 496: AIR 1950 All 157.

[Overruled in AIR 1964 SC 986.]

——S. 447 — Applicability — An offence under S. 447 is a distinct offence from the offence contemplated by S. 127 of the Madras District Municipalities Act. Mere entry in the premises connected with water supply is an offence under Section 127. Under S. 441, I. P. Code intention of such person to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of such property is the governing factor. AIR 1955 NUC (Andhra) 3623 (DB).

——Ss. 447 and 441 — Criminal trespass — Ingredients — Intention and knowledge — A mere knowledge on the part of the accused that the result of their act is likely to cause annoyance or insult or intimidation to the complainant is sufficient to sustain a charge of trespass. The Section speaks of intention and not of knowledge. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. 1957 Cri LJ 719: AIR 1957 Cal 385.

——S. 447 — Intention — Proof — Use of force not necessary. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. AIR 1955 NUC (Him Pra) 4516.

——Ss. 447 and 441 — Landlord going on his land and unyoking bullocks of his tenant — Intention to take forcible possession of land or to intimidate, insult or annoy cannot be inferred — Conviction under S. 447 cannot be sustained. See Ranbir Penal Code (1989), S. 441. 1965 (2) Cri LJ 504: AIR 1965 J and K 90.

——S. 447 — Complainant entering upon land of accused to effect repairs to fence serving as boundary between lands of both parties without intention to annoy, intimidate or insult accused — Act does not amount to criminal trespass so as to give accused right to inflict injury on complainant. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. ILR (1964) Cut 706.

——Ss. 447 and 426 — Criminal trespass on land — Intention to commit an offence or to insult by entry on land — Proof of bona fide claim for right — Entry does not become criminal.

To establish criminal trespass on land the prosecution must prove that the real or dominant intent of the entry was to commit an offence or insult, intimidate or annoy the occupant and that any claim of right was a mere cloak to cover the real intent or at any rate constituted no more than a subsidiary intent. An entry upon land made under a bona fide claim of right however ill founded in law the claim, may be, does not become criminal merely because a foreseen consequence of the entry is annoyance to the occupant. 52 Cr LJ 173 (PC), Rel. on; AIR 1928 Rang 113 and 1 Weir 522, Dist.

Where the complainant who had filed a complaint against the accused under Ss. 447 and 426, I. P. C. on the allegation that he had purchased certain land from the father of the accused and was in peaceful possession thereof and the accused trespassed upon the land and forcibly ploughed it did not mention the particulars of plot purchased by him and the evidence showed that the complainant had purchased some property other than the property claimed by him:

Held, that the accused did not commit any criminal trespass on the disputed land so as to make them liable under section 447 and Sec. 426, Indian Penal Code. 28 Cut LT 375: (1962) 4 Orissa JD 222.

——S. 447 — Intention, a question of fact. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. AIR 1955 NUC (Pat) 227.

——S. 447 — Intention — Complainant in possession of land as tenant — Accused committing trespass by ploughing land — Primary mention of accused being to lay claim to land and not to commit any offence or annoy complainant — Accused cannot be convicted under S. 447. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. AIR 1955 NUC (Pat) 104.

——S. 447 — S, a companion of accused, accompanying police unarmed to point out house of H and entering it — S shouting for help either on being attacked by H or apprehending attack — Accused, armed with weapons rushing to the rescue of S and entering house of H — Entry held not unlawful as to amount to offence under S. 447. 1963 Raj LW 436: ILR (1963) 13 Raj 789.

——S. 447 — Intention specified in section must be present — Absence of finding as to intention — Effect — The accused could not be convicted under S. 447. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. 1951 Raj LW 501.

3. To intimidate.

——S. 447 — Essentials of offence — Accused having right of passage through verandah of building, squatting there — No allegation or proof of criminal force or show of force — No offence — Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), S. 522 — One month's time limit in sub-section (1) — Effect of.

Mere squatting on verandah of a building by accused who claimed an easementary right of passage will not constitute an offence under Section 447, Penal Code. To constitute the offence the accused must display a readiness to use force or criminal intimidation and thus scare away the victim of his offence.

A Court acting under sub-section (3) of S. 522 Criminal P. C. must make an order under that section within one month of the date on which it confirms the conviction in appeal, reference or revision: When sub-section (3) of S. 522 say that an order under that section may be made by any 'Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision' it obviously has in mind an order under sub-section (1), and such an order can be made by the Court only when convicting the person concerned or at any time within one month from the date of the conviction On an ordinary and natural construction of the section this limitation must apply also to a Court which, acting under sub-sec. (3), wants to pass an order under sub-section (1). And, in relation to such a Court, the words 'when convicting such persons or at any time within one month from the date of the conviction', obviously mean, 'when upholding the conviction of such person, or within one month from that date.' (1950) 1 MLJ 670; AIR 1927 Nag 131 and AIR 1949 Mad 191. Rel. on; AIR 1951 Orissa 30 and AIR 1953 Cal 308 and 393, Dissented from. (1960) MLJ (Cr) 380: 1960 Ker LJ 460: (1960) Ker LT 556: (1960) 2 Ker LR 723: ILR (1960) Ker 1096: 1960 Cr LJ 1464: AIR 1960 Ker 348 (349) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

——Ss. 447, 441 — Intention — Presumption — While the fact that a trespass causes or is likely to cause annoyance to a person in possesson may by itself be insufficient to justify a conviction for criminal trespass, the presumption of the necessary intention may be drawn where a person who has absolutely no interest in land in possession of others, forcibly takes possession in spite of the protests of the owner. 1959 Cri LJ 588: AIR 1959 Ker 146 (148) (Pt C) (Pr 8) (DB).

4. To annoy.

——S. 447 — Applicability — Accused entering upon party land after it had vested in State — Offence — Accused having no claim to it after vesting — Offence held fell under S. 447. Intention to annoy held could be presumed. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 4807.

——S. 447 — Applicability — Essentials — Intention to cause annoyance or to commit mischief.

In a prosecution under Ss. 447 and 427, I. P. Code, it is not sufficient for the Court to say that the complainant has succeeded in proving his case and punish the accused. The trying Magistrate must on a consideration of the evidence come to a conclusion that the offence alleged against the accused was made out in evidence. Trespass by itself is not criminal. It is criminal only when it is done with the intention to commit an offence or with the intention of causing annoyance, etc. Unless there is a finding that the accused persons entered on the land with the intention of cutting the betel leaf creepers or with the intention of causing annoyance to the complainant or that mischief was done, there can be no conviction either under S. 447 or 427, I. P. Code. ('58) 24 Cut LT 310.

——S. 447 — Applicability — Entry in public building — Accused, a stamp vendor going to the verandah of Sub-Registrar's building and selling stamps — His example followed by another stamp vendor with whom he had a quarrel — Noise created disturbing work of office— Sub Registrar ordering accused to leave verandah but accused refusing to do so saying that it was Government building — Accused held had a right to go to the building for public business but not to open private business of his own without permission— Registrar and clerks had every right to claim that they should not be disturbed — On refusal of accused he was certain to cause annoyance. AIR 1955 NUC (Pat) 227.

——S. 447 — Intention to insult or annoy — Landlord entering the premises of tenant with intent to ventilate grievance about non-payment of rent — No criminal trespass committed.

Held, on facts that the object of the accused being to seek the intervention of the Chief Minister who was entertained by the complainant in her troubles viz, non-payment of rent by the complainant for a long period, even if the accused knew that her entry was likely to annoy the complainant it could not be held that criminal trespass had been committed. The conviction could not be sustained. AIR 1960 SC 160, Rel. on. (1963) 65 Pun LR 953.

——Ss. 447, 109, 441, 425 and 426 — Criminal trespass and mischief — Intention — Abetment — Where the accused instructed her maternal uncle to raise the roof which necessitated the cutting of the complainant's eaves and entering upon his property, the accused must be deemed to have intended to cause annoyance and wrongful loss to the complainant and, therefore, to have abetted the offence of criminal trespass. 5 Sau LR 82: 1953 Cri LJ 881: AIR 1953 Sau 81 (81, 82) (Pt C) (Prs 4, 6) (DB).

5. Bona fide claim of right.

——S. 447 — Intention to insult or annoy has to be proved — Proof — Intention cannot be inferred from effect produced on mind of person in possession — Bona fide claim to right under contract with zamindar — Whether Zamindar had power to let in accused, is immaterial — Assertion of title held could not be held to be not bona fide. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 2857.

——S. 447 — Applicability — The accused claimed the field in which the trespass was said to have been committed as an occupant on the basis of sale from the original occupant while the complainant was mere sub-tenant (shekmi holder) of the latter for the previous year — Held, that the case was of a civil nature and secondly the accused could not be held to have intention to commit an offence and no offence under S. 447 could be held to have been committed by him. 1954 Cri LJ 394: AIR 1954 Bhopal 6 (7) (Pt B) (Pr 10).

——S. 447 — Trespass by landlord to take possession of his own land — Occupant claiming to be tenant — No criminal intention can be attributed — Trespass is civil. 52 Cr LJ 173 (PC), Rel. on. 62 Bom LR 499: 1960 Nag LJ 350: 1960 Cr LJ 1425: ILR (1961) Bom 131: AIR 1960 Bom 481 (482) (Pt B) (Pr 7).

——Ss. 447 and 441 — Bona fide boundary dispute between accused and complainant — Accused entering under bona fide belief of his right — Dispute is civil — No offence of criminal trespass. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. 1959 Cri LJ 1093: AIR 1959 Manipur 38.

——Ss. 447, 379 — Removal of crop — Accused claiming bona fide right in land — Nature of offence — Assertion supported by some evidence — He cannot be convicted for offence of trespass. See Penal Code (1860), S. 379. 1956 Cri LJ 902: AIR 1956 Mys 49.

——S. 447 — Criminal trespass into land — Defence — Bona fide claim of right to possession — Mere assertion or a claim of right not sufficient. (1962) 4 Orissa JD 210: 28 Cut LT 382.

——Ss. 447 and 441 — Criminal trespass — Assertion of claim of right — A person who enters upon land in the possession of another in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right cannot be convicted of criminal trespass under S. 447 as the entry is not made with any such intent as to constitute an offence, although the mere assertion of a claim of right in itself will not be sufficient defence to the charge of criminal trespass. 51 Cri LJ 1565: AIR 1950 Pat 564.

——S. 447 — Applicability — Bona fide dispute — No offence.

Before a conviction under S. 447, is maintained, it must be held that the accused had not occupied the land under a bona fide claim of right and that the real and dominant intention of the accused was to insult or intimidate or annoy the complainant when the accused entered into the property. Where it is clear that there is a bona fide dispute regarding the title to the land in dispute it cannot be said that any offence under S. 447, has been committed. ILR (1957) Punj 687: 1960 Cri LJ 400: AIR 1960 Punj 160 (163) (Pt D) (Pr 6).

——S. 447 — Scope — Bona fide claim of right. It is a dangerous doctrine to hold that a person who may consider himself legally entitled to possession may walk upon the property while another person is in peaceful possession of it, take the law into his own hands and when he is prosecuted, be permitted to say that all he intended was to claim possession to such property and not to intimidate, insult or annoy the person who was in peaceful possession thereof. AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 759.

——Ss. 447 and 441 — Bona fide claim of right. The question of the entry of the accused who is the landlord in the field being in bona fide exercise of his claim does not arise because no landlord can be permitted to re-enter the property on the alleged expiry of the lease otherwise than in due course of law and if he so enters, he cannot be permitted to plead that he did so in the bona fide exercise of his right. AIR 1954 Sau 110.

——Ss. 447 and 147 — Rioting and criminal trespass — Accused numbering more than 50 going in company of Court's officer to take delivery of field under order of Court — Scuffle — No offence. See Penal Code (1860), S. 147. 1960 Cri LJ 1665: AIR 1960 Tripura 43.

6. Master and servant.

——Ss. 447 and 379 — Bona fide belief of title — Servant's liability.

A vada was owned by one M. The Thakarai (landlord) of the village thinking that the original tenant had left, and the vada had reverted to him, entered the vada and removed the things of another person lying there.

Held, that the landlord was guilty under Sections 447 and 379:

Held further, that though one may presume that in a small village the servant of the accused knew that the accused was not in possession of the vada his (servant's) conviction could not be based on mere presumption. It must be shown that the servant intended to assist his master to cause wrongful loss to the owner of the vada. 52 Cri LJ 672: AIR 1951 Kutch 49 (49) (Prs 2, 3).

7. "In the possession of another".

——S. 447 — Applicability — Land requisitioned and allotted — Notice of requisition to stranger — Trespass by stranger — Offence is under Section 447, Penal Code. See Assam Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act (25 of 1948), S. 10. AIR 1955 NUC (Assam) 2811 (DB).

——S. 447 — In the possession of another — Complainant obtaining delivery of possession in execution of decree — Accused admitting such possession — Court is bound to consider effect of these facts. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. 1961 Ker LT 799.

——Ss. 447 and 441 — Possession must be actual physical possession — Persons entitled to rights of easement are not persons in possession. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. 1960 Cri LJ 631 (1): AIR 1960 Manipur 17.

——Ss. 447 and 441 — Offence under S. 447 — Magistrate is concerned only with question of possession, not of title. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. 1960 Cri LJ 404: AIR 1960 Tripura 4.

8. Joint possession and ownership.

——S. 447 — Applicability — Criminal trespass by co-owner — Ouster — Proof — Necessity — Person having grazing rights but not right to construct — Building put up over common land against will of co-sharers — Construction is act of ouster of persons having grazing rights — Case held fell within mischief of S. 447 — Person constructing is guilty of criminal trespass. AIR 1955 NUC (Assam) 3632.

9. "Unlawfully remains there".

——Ss. 447 and 441 — "Unlawfully remains there" — Accused setting up stall within market boundary, asked to remove — Accused still remaining — Intention is to intimidate and annoy — Offence is not erection of stall but refusal to remove it. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. AIR 1955 NUC (Cal) 836.

——Ss. 447, 441, 448 and 504 — Accused entering complainant's house for demanding their dues — On refusal to pay accused abusing complainant in filthy language and continuing to do so in spite of restraint shown by complainant — Intention to insult, intimidate or annoy or to provoke complainant to break peace — Inference of — Accused held guilty under Ss. 448 and 504. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. 1965 (1) Cri LJ 86: AIR 1964 Tripura 69.

10. Use of criminal force.

——S. 447 — Applicability — Common object of unlawful assembly to take forcible possession of land belonging to employer of prosecutor — Conviction under S. 447 cannot be sustained. AIR 1955 NUC (Pat) 5699.

11. Criminal trespass whether continuing offence.

——Ss. 447 and 441 — Continued possession of area cannot invoke provisions of section. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. AIR 1955 NUC (Assam) 4210.

——S. 447 — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 403 — Continuing offence — Conviction for trespass — Accused not vacating — Raising of crop by accused — Subsequent complaint for trespass into the identical plot — Held, there is no second act of trespass — Accused held could not be convicted once again on same act of trespass — The fact that accused refused to vacate does not constitute fresh act of trespass. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 403. AIR 1955 NUC (Assam) 3308.

12. Evidence and proof.

——S. 447 — Offence under first part of S. 141 — Essentials to be proved — Intention must be proved — Charges under Ss. 143 and 447 — Evidence must establish ingredients of S. 441 — Evidence of state of mind has to be examined — Annoyance or insult felt by complainant is wholly irrelevant consideration in charge under S. 441. See Penal Code (1860), S. 141. 1955 Cri LJ 1338: AIR 1955 Cal 515.

——Ss. 447 and 426 — Acquittal on plea not taken by accused — Validity — Charge under Ss. 426 and 447, I. P. C. — Land found not to be in possession of accused — Plea of bona fide claim or right of accused — Identity of land not disputed—Acquittal on the ground that complainant did not prove identity of land not valid. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 245. ('62) 28 Cut LT 382.

——S. 447 — Criminal tresspass — Burden of proving possession of disputed property on the complainant — Presumption.

In a prosecution for criminal trespass on his land, the burden is heavy on the complainant to establish beyond reasonable doubt that he was in possession of the property on which the criminal trespass was alleged to have been committed. In the absence of reliable evidence on the part of the complainant, no inference about trespass over that property could be made and the charge under S. 447, must, therefore, fail. 1961 All Cr R 314: 1961 All WR (Supp) 60: (1961) 27 Cut LT 111.

——S. 447 — Burden of proof as to possession is on complainant — Accused producing lease deeds in his favour — Presumption will be that he continued in possession — Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101, 104 and 114.

In a case under S. 447 it is not proper to shift the burden on the accused person to show that they failed to prove their possession on the date on which the incident was said to have taken place. The complainant has to establish beyond reasonable doubt that he was in possession of the disputed plots. The leases of the past years produced by the accused would raise a presumption that the lands, having been originally cultivated by him continued to remain in his possession unless there was clear evidence to show that he was dispossessed by the complainant. (1957) 23 Cut LT 38.

13. Practice and procedure.

——S. 447 — U. P. Panchayat Raj Act (26 of 1947), S. 55 — Accused jointly tried by Magistrate for offences under Ss. 143, 447 and 506, Penal Code — Case cannot be said to be cognizable by a Panchayati Adalat unless all the offences were cognizable by it — Offence under S. 143, Penal Code, not being cognizable by it, S. 55 did not apply and therefore, trial by Magistrate was not illegal. See Panchayats — U. P. Panchayat Raj Act (26 of 1947), S. 55. AIR 1952 All 431.

(Penal Code (1860), S. 448.)

1. Scope.
2. Intention.
3. Illustrative cases.
4. Evidence and proof.
5. Practice and procedure.
6. Sentence.

1. Scope.

——S. 448 — Gist of offence — Presence of person in possession if necessary when accused enters.

To hold that the person in possession must be present when the accused enters into or upon the property is to introduce an element which is not to be found in S. 441 or Section 442 of the Indian Penal Code. (1964) MLJ (Cr) 115: 1954 (1) Cr LJ 52: (1963) 1 Mys LJ 253: ILR (1963) Mys 435: AIR 1964 Mys 11 (12, 13) (Pt A) (Prs 3, 5).

——Ss. 448, 441, 40 — Intention to intimidate, insult or annoy — Intimidation, insult or annoyance contemplated need not be instantaneous with moment of entry but may be caused subsequently — Landlord breaking open house of tenant in his absence and taking possession — Intention to annoy tenant must be presumed — Distinction between intention and motive stated. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. 1964 (1) Cri LJ 427: AIR 1964 Punj 145.

——S. 448 — Scope.

The section makes the trespass criminal if the entry is with an intent to commit an offence and for that it is necessary that the offence must be against the person in possession. The entry is also criminal if the intention is to intimidate, insult or annoy the person in possession. Therefore if an entry is made in a house with an intention to beat and assault a third person other than the owner of the house, such action is bound to annoy the owner of the house unless he is a consenting party. 1959 Cri LJ 1487: AIR 1959 Tripura 49 (50) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

2. Intention.

——S. 448 — Criminal trespass — 'Intent to annoy' — Advocate entering surreptitiously house of Magistrate — Inspection by him of papers in pending file — Conduct highly improper but no intention to annoy — He cannot be convicted of criminal trespass.

Where an advocate enters the house of a Magistrate in his absence, taking along with him the books wanted by the Magistrate, and finding on the table the file of a case in which he has appeared, inspects it, it cannot be said that the Advocate in entering the house surreptitiously commits the offence of criminal trespass punishable under Section 448, Penal Code. But as the intention of the advocate was to inspect the file and leave the premises without allowing the Magistrate any opportunity of coming to know of his action it cannot be held that there was any deliberate intent to annoy. AIR 1947 All 61 and AIR 1916 All 152 and AIR 1938 Lah 534, Rel. on. 1962 All Cr R 27: 1962 All WR (HC) 13: 1961 (2) Cr LJ 756: AIR 1961 All 637 (638, 639) (Prs 6, 7).

——S. 448 — Intention — Proof of — Inference from circumstances — Proper.

On a complaint from M the occupier of a shop that the accused trespassed at night beat him and took forcible possession of the shop, the accused were convicted of offences under Ss. 147 and 448 and acquitted of offences under Ss. 323, 379 and 504, Penal Code. The conviction and sentence based on the conclusions of the trial Court as to the intention of the accused were accepted and the conviction upheld in appeal.

Held, in revision, it is impossible in most cases to prove intention by direct evidence and it has to be inferred from circumstances proved.

The mere fact that the accused were acquitted of offences under Sections 323, 379 and 504 of the Penal Code cannot be held to rebut the presumption as to intention arising from the probable consequences of the acts complained of. 1952 AWR (HC) 337: 1952 All Cri R 93: 1953 Cri LJ 1664: AIR 1953 All 725 (725) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

See Penal Code (1860), S. 442. 1965 All LJ 736.

——Ss. 448 and 454 — Suit for partition — Receiver appointed for suit property including shop in possession of accused — Receiver not entitled to take possession wrongly putting his own locks on the shop — Entry by accused into shop not an offence.

In a suit for partition a receiver was appointed for the suit property including a shop in possession of the accused. There was, however, no order of the Court directing him to take possession of the shop in dispute. The Receiver sealed the locks of the accused which were on the shop and put on his own locks. The accused who were informed that their locks on the shop had been tampered with, entered the shop to find out whether any articles had been removed or not. The accused were prosecuted under Ss. 448 and 454, Penal Code for interfering with receiver's possession.

Held, that no offence under Sections 448 and 454 was committed by the accused. The entry of the accused into the shop in dispute was not even unlawful and therefore much less a criminal offence. An order under Order 40, Rule 1, C. P. Code, directing the Receiver to take possession, was absolutely necessary to entitle him to take possession of the property. In the absence of such an order his sealing the locks of the accused and putting his own locks on the shop was wrongful and did not dispossess the accused. AIR 1923 Nag 6, Rel. on. The possession by the Receiver was also not in accordance with law as he had not followed the procedure laid down in Order 21, Rule 35, C. P. C., for obtaining possession, but simply sealed the locks of the accused and put his own locks on it. Therefore the Receiver could not, in law, be said to have been in possession of the shop when the accused entered the shop. AIR 1959 Punj 468, Rel on. Further, as the nature of the suit itself showed that the accused had some title in the shop in dispute, the Receiver must, in law, be held to be in possession, if he was in possession at all, on behalf of the accused as well as the other parties and therefore they could not possibly be deemed to have committed criminal trespass by entering the shop. ——Ss. 448, 441 — "Unlawfully remains there".

Where the accused took possession of the rooms belonging to the complainant when the latter had left for another place for a short-while by breaking open the padlocks, but refused to vacate them when on his return the complainant asked him to vacate, the latter part of Section 441 applies and the accused is guilty under Section 448. 85 Cal LJ 200: 51 Cri LJ 1496: AIR 1950 Cal 410 (410) (Pr 4).

——S. 448 — Accused ejected upon court delivery to complainant — Accused forcibly entering into building is guilty of criminal trespass.

Where a court effects delivery the court really puts such a person in physical possession of the property delivered. Aggrieved persons will have to seek re-delivery or to bring a fresh suit and not bring together their comrades to disturb the peaceful possession of the property delivered over. The criminal court is bound to respect such a record and give due importance to the same. Persons ejected upon delivery are guilty of criminal trespass, when they forcibly enter the building. 1959 Ker LT 501: 1959 Ker LR 457: 1959 Ker LJ 489: 1959 Mad LJ (Cri) 861.

——Ss. 448, 441 — "To annoy" — Entry into tenant's house to demand rent is lawful — But if accused remains on house after refusal to pay rent, and throws out effects of tenant, the accused commits criminal trespass. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. AIR 1955 NUC (Madh Bha) 3780.

——Ss. 448 and 452 — Accused entering the house of A and B to intimidate B to withdraw a case filed by him — Scuffle taking place resulting in injuries to both accused and A and B — No evidence to show that the accused committed house trespass after making preparations for causing hurt or assault— No indication also that the accused really intended or attempted to cause any deadly injury to B—The offences committed by the accused fall under Sections 324 and 448, Penal Code and not under Sections 307 and 452, Penal Code and are therefore compoundable. ——Ss. 448, 441 — Entry under bona fide claim of right — When the accused claims that he entered a certain house under bona fide claim of right he could be held guilty of an offence under the section if it is found that the dominant intention was to commit an offence or insult, intimidate or annoy the person in possession. If the intention is found to be merely to make an entry peacefully no offence could be held to have been made out. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. 1958 Cri LJ 1099: AIR 1958 Raj 214.

——Ss. 448, 441, 447 and 504 — Accused entering complainant's house for demanding their dues — On refusal to pay accused abusing complainant in filthy language and continuing to do so in spite of restraint shown by complainant — Intention to insult, intimidate or annoy or to provoke complainant to break peace— Inference of — Accused held guilty under Sections 448 and 504. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. 1965 (1) Cri LJ 86: AIR 1964 Tripura 69.

——S. 448 — Intention — Evidence.

To establish a charge under S. 448, Indian Penal Code, there must be an unlawful entry and there must be proof of one or other of the intentions mentioned in Section 441 of the Code. It has to be found upon evidence that the person concerned entered a place which was in the possession of another and that the entry was made with a view to causing insult, annoyance or injury to the person concerned. 1956 Cr LJ 524: 97 Cal LJ 32: AIR 1956 Cal 118 (120) (Pt B) (Pr 7).

——Ss. 448, 354 — Case under Ss. 354, 448 — Testimony of prosecutrix — What she said at or about time of occurrence being part of 'res gestae' can be corroborative evidence of her evidence — Conviction can be based on such testimony — (Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 6 and 133). See Penal Code (1860), S. 354. 1953 Cri LJ 748: AIR 1953 Cal 332.

5. Practice and procedure.

——Ss. 448, 147 and 341 — 'To commit an offence' — Proof of — Trial under Ss. 448, 147 and 341 — Acquittal under Ss. 147 and 341 — Effect.

The accused persons in trial Court were convicted under Sections 147, 341 and 448, Penal Code, but on appeal, while their convictions under Sections 147 and 341 were set aside, the conviction under Section 448 was maintained. There was no finding that there was intention on the part of the accused persons to intimidate, or to insult or annoy the complainant.

Held, that an acquittal on a charge means the elements necessary to constitute the offence charged have not been proved by the evidence called. Consequently when the Judge held that the charges of rioting and of wrongful restraint had not been proved, that meant and implied that the elements of these offences had not been established. It would be speculation of the worst type to hold that although the evidence fell short of the proof of rioting or of wrongful restraint, the intent to commit some unnamed offence survived the acquittals. Such speculation could never be indulged in administering criminal law. In the absence of a definite finding that some specific offence was intended to be committed as shown by the evidence, it could not be said that the element of Section 448, relating to intent to commit an offence had been established. It was not open to the Court to find that there was some sort of intent to commit some offence. The Court's duty was to find what that offence was before it could convict the accused under S. 448. AIR 1955 NUC (Cal) 5921.

——S. 448 — Charge under — Omission to state intention — Effect — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 225).

In a charge under Section 448, I. P. Code, the Magistrate should state the intention with which the accused person trespassed into the house of the complainant as contemplated under Ss. 441 and 442, I. P. Code. Omission to state it renders the charge defective and the whole proceeding is vitiated. 1957 Cri LJ 988: AIR 1957 Orissa 190 (191) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

●——S. 449 — Applicability — Murder not committed — Section applies.

An act can be said to be committed 'in order to the committing of an offence' even though the offence may not be completed. Thus, if a person commits a house trespass with the purpose of the committing of theft but has failed to accomplish the purpose, it will be proper to say that he has committed the house trespass in order to the committing of theft. There can be no doubt that the words 'in order to' have been used to mean 'with the purpose of'. If the purpose in committing the house trespass is the commission of an offence punishable with death the house trespass becomes punishable under Section 449 of the Penal Code. Hence the fact that the murder was not actually committed will not affect the applicability of Section 449 of the Penal Code. Matiullah Sheikh v. State of West Bengal. (1964) 6 SCR 978: 1965 All WR (HC) 93: 1965 Mad LJ (Cri) 102: (1965) 1 SCJ 216: 1965 All Cri R 106: 1965 Mad WN 3: (1964) 1 SCWR 501: 1964 SCD 766: 1965 (1) Cr LJ 126: AIR 1965 SC 132 (133) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 6).

● ——Ss. 449, 307, 324 — Intention of accused — Test — Firing of gun after house trespass — Effect.

In every case the intention of the accused should be judged by taking into consideration all the circumstances of the case. Simply because a gun is fired, it is not necessary to infer that it was done with no other intention except that of committing murder. When a thief or a dacoit is pursued for his arrest and when he turns round and fires at the pursuer it may be inferred that he intended either to murder him or to cause him injuries with the intention or knowledge given in Sections 299 and 300, Penal Code.

Held, in the circumstances of the case that it was proper to infer that the accused intended to cause only that injury which he actually did and no more and, therefore, he should be convicted with the offence under Section 324 and not Section 307, Penal Code, and, therefore, his conviction under Section 449, Penal Code, could not be maintained. (1951) 52 Cr LJ 276: AIR 1951 Raj 42 (44) (Pt C) (Pr 10) (DB).

——S. 452 — Ingredient of offence.

For a conviction under Section 452, Penal Code, it is necessary to prove that the dominant intent of the accused was to cause hurt to or to assault or to wrongfully restrain any person. The fact that the accused had the intention to intimidate or hurt in forcibly carrying his wife does not mean that he went to the house of her parents for the purpose of causing hurt to or assaulting or wrongfully restraining any inmate of the house. 1959 Jab LJ 570: 1959 MPC 738: 1960 Cr LJ 83: 1959 MPLJ 1193: AIR 1960 Madh Pra 24 (26) (Pt C) (Pr 8).

There must be clear evidence of preparation for causing hurt to sustain a conviction under Section 452 of the Penal Code. ——S. 454 — Criminal trespass — What constitutes — Mere entry on property is not criminal trespass — Intention to cause annoyance, intimidation or insult must be present.

To make out a case of criminal trespass, it is not enough to show that the accused persons merely effected an entry on the property of another, but what is necessary to find out is whether their main intention was to cause annoyance, intimidation or insult. That such annoyance, intimidation or insult may be the necessary consequence of such an act of entry, but that is not enough. In order to establish that the entry on the property was with the intent to annoy, intimidate or insult, it is necessary for the Court to be satisfied that causing such annoyance, intimidation or insult was the aim of the entry and that it is not sufficient for the purpose to show merely that the natural consequences of the entry was likely to be annoyance, intimidation or insult and that this likely consequence was known to the persons entering. AIR 1964 SC 986, Applied.

Hence, where certain municipal servants entered upon the shop premises of the petitioner — who had failed to comply with the requirements of the municipal licence and was asked to vacate the premises — and gave possession of the premises to another by breaking open the lock, in accordance with an order from the Executive Officer:

Held, that the municipal servants merely carried out the order of the Executive Officer, their dominant intention being to execute the order and not to cause any annoyance, intimidation or insult to any person. Section 454 of the Penal Code was, therefore, not attracted. 31 Cut LT 438: 1965 (2) Cr LJ 791: AIR 1965 Orissa 212 (213, 214) (Prs 6, 7, 8).

——S. 455 — Intention in criminal cases can be gathered from acts and circumstances — Forcibly ejecting the person possessing property since long is offence — Highhanded act can be saved as bona fide claim for property — Conviction under Section 455 is not vitiated for want of specification of intention in charge.

Held, on facts that both the accused effected their entry in the house after breaking open the lock of the house of the complainant and caused him injury. The complainant was in possession of the house from a long time before the date of occurrence.

Original intent could be gathered from the acts of the accused. AIR 1952 Hyd 38, Foll. Intention had in most cases to be inferred from the circumstances and where the probable consequence of the act alleged to be criminal trespass was to cause annoyance to the person in possession, it would be presumed that it was committed with that intention. AIR 1953 Pepsu 13 and AIR 1950 All 157, Foll. It was a question of fact whether the presumption of intent was disclosed by proof of any independent act. Where a person had been in peaceful possession of property for a fairly long time, it was not open to a claimant of the property claiming bona fide title to resort to force for the purpose of ejecting him.

In the instant case the complainant had been in peaceful possession of the property for a long time and possession of the house was taken by causing him injury and putting him in fear thus intimidating him; also causing annoyance to him in a high-handed manner. The act of the accused was not done in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right.

Though a conviction under Section 457, Penal Code could not be sustained without specification of the intention in the charge, yet a conviction under Section 455 was not vitiated due to the want of specification of the intention in the charge. All that was required under the law was that the guilty intention under the section had to be proved but it was not necessary to prove specifically which of the several guilty intentions the accused had. AIR 1917 Cal 824, Foll.

The intention was a question of fact and the concurrent findings of the Courts below could not be disturbed in the absence of grave reason to the contrary in revision. 1962 MPLJ (Notes) 337.

——S. 456 — Conviction under — Guilty intention need only be proved.

To sustain a conviction under Section 456 it is not necessary to specify the criminal intention in the charge as it should be in a charge under Section 457, Penal Code. It is sufficient if a guilty intention is proved, such as is contemplated by Section 441. 1961 Ker LJ 844: 1963 Mad LJ (Cri) 124: 1961 Ker LT 835: 1962 (1) Cr LJ 433: AIR 1962 Ker 81 (83) (Pt B) (Pr 12).

——S. 456 — Intention — Determination of.

A Court can, under relevant circumstances, come to the necessary conclusion that the entry of an accused in a house was effected with, an intent such as is provided by Section 441, Penal Code. The intention may be determined as well from direct evidence as from the conduct of the accused and the attendant circumstances. Therefore, if the circumstances of a particular case warrant the inference that the entry was with intent to commit any offence within the meaning of Section 441, conviction under Section 456 will be proper. ——Ss. 456 and 497 — House trespass with intent to commit adultery — Evidence and proof.

For a conviction for the offence of house trespass under Section 456, Penal Code, with intent to commit adultery, it is necessary to establish the ingredients of Section 497, Penal Code, in regard to the intended act of sexual intercourse. It is necessary, therefore, to prove that the woman with whom the accused intended to have sexual intercourse was the wife of another man, that the accused had knowledge or had reason to believe that she was the wife of another man and that the intended intercourse was without the consent or connivance of the husband. 19 All 74, Rel. on; AIR 1954 All 17, Distinguished. 1956 Cr LJ 231: ILR (1956) Madh Bha 153: Madh BLR 1955 Cr 318: Madh BLJ 1955 HCR 1515: AIR 1956 Madh Bha 69 (69) (Pr 3).

——Ss. 456, 441 —Intent to annoy — Where the accused visited the complainant's house at night in response to an invitation from the latter's daughter and in view of the strained relations between the complainant and accused the latter had not the slightest intention of annoying the former and was, keenly desirous of not having his visit discovered by him — Held, that the charge under S. 456 could not be sustained. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. AIR 1954 Nag 18.

——Ss. 456 and 457 — Charge under Section 457 — Conviction under S. 456 — Legality — No inflexible rule exists that a person charged under S. 457 can never be convicted under S. 456 — An accused can be convicted under Section 456 though the specific offence in Section 457 is not proved against him by virtue of Section 238 Criminal P. C. if he is not prejudiced at the trial. See Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 238. 1957 Cr LJ 286 (Orissa).

——S. 456 — Charge under — Finding as to — Intention — Specific mention — Necessity — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 367).

To sustain a charge under Section 456, Penal Code, a Court must come to a definite inference as to what was the particular intention with which the entry was effected. If the intention was to annoy the inmates such a finding should be clearly mentioned in the judgment. If, on the other hand, the intention was to commit some other offence such as adultery or unnatural offence with the inmates of the house, a finding to that effect must be recorded, based on evidence. A vague statement that the petitioner must have intended to annoy or insult the inmate would not suffice. ILR (1956) Cut 502: 22 Cut LT 475: 1957 Cr LJ 286 (286, 287) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (Orissa).

——S. 457 — Applicability and scope.

The thana house is a public property and the Officer-in-charge must be presumed to have the overall charge of possession thereof. The entry of an A. S. I. attached to the thana is a legalised act only for the purpose of carrying out official duties and not for perpetration of an illegal act. Therefore, where if the prosecution case is true the accused attached to the thana as an A. S. I. entered into the office room of the thana at night taking precaution to conceal his entry and participated in the commission of the offence of the theft of the money deposited in a safe in thana by the post office it would clearly come within the scope of Sec. 457, Indian Penal Code.

Section 460 can be invoked only, if, from the evidence, it is clearly possible to conclude that before the commission of the lurking house-trespass by night, or house-breaking by night, the offenders did not have a common intention of committing anything other than the above-mentioned offences and that if during the course of the commission of such an offence one of the persons causes death or grievous hurt to any person, then only, every person jointly concerned in committing lurking house-trespass by night or house-breaking by night shall be guilty of an offence under Section 460, Penal Code. If on the other evidence Court is satisfied that the accused are guilty of murder, then Section 460, Penal Code is out of place. In such case the invocation of Section 460, Penal Code is irregular.

——Ss. 460 and 302 — Person committing house-breaking by night — Murder committed during occurrence — Punishment under Section 302 cannot be escaped.

Section 460 merely provides for constructive liability of persons committing or concerned in, inter alia house-breaking by night in the course of which death is caused by one of the offenders and it prescribes enhanced penalty for the joint offenders. To attract this section it matters little as to who actually causes the death, for, everyone jointly concerned in committing the house-breaking is liable to the enhanced penalty if death is caused in the course of the offence, no matter who is really responsible for the death. That section does not serve as an exception to Section 302, Penal Code. Therefore, if a person committing house-breaking by night also actually commits murders he must attract the penalty for the latter offence under Section 302. He cannot escape the punishment provided for murder merely because the murder was committed by him while he was committing the offence of house-breaking. Neither the language of Section 460 nor the scheme of the Penal Code nor logic and commonsense would support such contention. ——S. 463 — Person endorsing Post Office National Saving Certificates in favour of Ration Department as security — Person dying — Heir of deceased getting transfer of certificate in name of deceased and encashing them, by signing the name of deceased and attesting the same — Heir commits forgery.

If a person who has given postal certificates as security to a department by taking them in the name of the said department dies, his heir can get the said amount by following two procedures, namely, (1) after obtaining a succession certificate, he can apply to the department concerned to release the security and then apply to the postal department for getting the certificates cashed, and (2) if the current value of the certificates at the time of the death of the holder does not exceed Rs. 5,000 he can, after the expiry of three months from the date of the death of the holder, satisfy the Postmaster-General that he is the sole heir of the holder and after making the relevant declaration recover the said money. In one case he has to incur expenses for obtaining the succession certificate, and in the other he has to wait for three months and thereafter produce evidence to the satisfaction of the Postmaster-General that he is the sole heir of the deceased holder of the certificates.

On the facts, the intention of the accused at the time when he made out the false documents was to short-circuit the alternative procedure open to him and receive the money without going through the expense and trouble involved therein. On the said facts there is no doubt that the heir had made the false documents with an intention to cause wrongful gain to himself. He secured an advantage by resorting to the device by which he was relieved of the trouble of satisfying the ration authority and the postal authority that he was the sole heir of the deceased and avoided the risk of their refusal, which would have entailed further delay, In that event he had secured an uneconomic advantage; in the former case he had made the false documents dishonestly and in the latter case fraudulently. ——Ss. 463, 464 and 466 — Applicability — Ingredients of offences under — Cr. P. Code (5 of 1898), Section 195 (1) — Applicability — "In relation to" — Meaning.

In order that document should be a false document within the meaning of first part of Section 464, I. P. C., it must appear that it was made with the intention of inducing the belief that such document was made by or by the authority of one who did not make it or give such authority. In other words, the document must purport to have been made, signed or sealed by a person who did not in fact make it. It is essential that the signature, seal or date of the document should be false. Section 466 will not apply to cases where a public officer or a person acting for a public officer whose duty it is to make entries in public books knowingly makes a false entry; but it would certainly apply to cases, where the document was forged by some unauthorised person with a view to make it appear that it was duly issued by a public officer. Thus the mere fact that a document contains false recitals or statements would not make it an offence of forgery within the meaning of Section 463, I. P. Code. The second part of Section 464 relates to unlawful alteration of a document in any material part by cancellation or otherwise without any lawful authority, with dishonest or fraudulent motive, whether it has been made or executed by him or by any other person. This part does not cover a case where a separate document has been prepared by the person under lawful authority. The alteration should be in the document which had already been made or executed, whether it be by way of cancellation or in any other manner, and such alteration must be without any lawful authority. In order that the case may come within the ambit of this provision, the alleged offence should be committed in or in relation to any proceeding in Court. The section covers cases where false evidence is fabricated for a contemplated suit. All that is necessary to attract its provisions is that the offence might have come to light in the course of the proceedings itself. That Section 195, Cr. P. Code., would certainly apply if the proceedings in the Court in or in relation to which the offence is alleged to have been committed have started and the complaint must be by the Court in which those proceedings are pending. Even if the civil proceeding is disposed of by the order of the Court before the prosecution is launched, Section 195, Cr. P. Code, will still have application. It is so even where the suit has ended as a result of withdrawal, without being heard. If a complaint is lodged after the civil proceeding had been started in relation to which the offence was committed, no Court shall take cognizance of the same except on the complaint in writing by such Court as a Court to which such Court is subordinate. If there is a distinct offence disclosed by the same facts, the ingredients of which are not the same as the ingredients of an offence which is enumerated in Section 195, Cr. P. Code that section will not be a bar to the trial of that offence; but the provisions of Section 195 cannot be evaded by resorting to a mere device. (1958) MLJ (Cri) 854: (1958) 2 An WR 489.

——Ss. 463, 464 (First clause) — "False document" — Essentials.

To constitute an offence of forgery the document must be purported to have been signed, made or sealed by a person who did not in fact do it. It is of the essence of making a false document that the signature, seal or the date of it should be false. The fact that a document contains false recitals or statements which induce a person so deceived to part with or deliver property would not make it an offence of forgery. 1956 Andhra LT 678: 1956 Andhra WR 805.

——S. 463 — Ingredients of offence — Intent — Necessity.

Unless there is an element of fraud, the making of a false document does not amount to a forgery because one of the intents contemplated by Section 463 is that the false documents must be made with intent to commit fraud or that fraud may be committed. 1957 Cr LJ 442: AIR 1957 Cal 222 (224) (Pt A) (Pr 6)

——Ss. 463 and 464 — Making a false document.

What constitutes a false document, or part of a document, is not the writing of any number of words which in themselves are innocent, but the affixing the seal or signature of some person to the document or part of a document knowing that the seal or signature is not his, and that he gave no authority to affix it. In other words, the falsity consists in the document or part of a document being signed or sealed with the name or seal of a person who did not in fact sign or seal it. 7 Cal 352, Rel. on.

Until a false document is made either in whole or in part there cannot be any forgery. ——Ss. 463 and 477-A — Forgery and falsification of accounts — Scope.

Since there can be no forgery within the meaning of Section 463 of the Indian Penal Code, unless there is a dishonest and fraudulent preparation of a false document or part thereof, it was necessary for the charge to state that Exhibit P-8 was a false document prepared dishonestly or fraudulently. It should have further stated if the prosecution case was that the document was prepared dishonestly whether the intention with which the document was prepared was to cause wrongful gain to some one or wrongful loss to another. A false document is made not only when the whole of it is made but even in a case where a person makes only a part of it. No act amounts to falsification of account unless as provided by Section 477-A there is an intent to defraud or there is a wilful and international falsification of accounts. Held, that there was no legal evidence in the case to support the conviction of the appellant. (1965) MLJ (Cri) 463: 1967 Cri LJ 787: AIR 1967 Mys 86 (98) (Pt C) (Prs 49, 50).

——Ss. 463, 464, 465 and 29 — Essentials of offence — Printing and distributing false marriage invitations.

The two essential elements to constitute the offence of forgery under Section 463, Penal Code are that there must be deceit or intention to deceive; secondly actual or possible injury caused to some person or persons.

What constitutes 'making' of a document, depends essentially upon the nature and the use it is intended for. Indeed the definition of a document does not necessarily require that it should be in every case to be in the writing or contain the signature or facsimile of any person but includes what is done by way of printing.

The accused got printed false marriage invitations issued under the names of two persons announcing the celebration of marriage of the accused with the complainant who was a young woman of about 20 years inheriting property worth about thirty to forty thousand. Neither the complainant nor the persons under whose names they were issued had authorised the accused to print such invitations and in fact no marriage was fixed between the accused and the complainant. The accused distributed these invitations to friends and relatives and also caused them to be published in the newspapers with intent to deceive and cause injury to the complainant.

Held, that the marriage invitations were forged instruments and fell within the definition of false documents under Section 464, Penal Code and the accused was guilty of the offence of forgery under Section 463, Penal Code. ——S. 464 — Absence of authority — Proof of intention.

In every case of forgery, where the question of authority is raised, it is essential to prove not only lack of authority but also the dishonest intention with probably more than usual care. The reason is that mere abuse of authority would not necessarily lead to a conclusion that there is a forgery. Abuse of authority can be in various forms and every abuse of authority is not a crime. It is not forgery where the act is done under the honest belief that the party doing it had a right to do it although in point of fact he had really no such authority. 1952 Cri LJ 1480: ILR (1953) 1 Cal 81: AIR 1951 Cal 581 (583) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

——Ss. 464 and 465 — 'Fraudulently'.

From Sections 29, 453 and 464, Penal Code, it is clear that in order to sustain a charge under Section 465, it is necessary that the act of the accused must either be dishonest or fraudulent.

The term 'fraudulently' in Criminal Law means that there must be (1) deception actual or intended; (2) and injury or risk of injury though not to any particular person. (Case-law discussed).

A tenant applied to the Electricity Department for fixing electric connection in his premises As the Department according to its rule of practice would not give him the connection without the consent of the landlord the tenant by a forged letter concocted the consent.

Held, that though apparently no injury or loss to the Electric Department was discernible because the Department would get the lawful charges for the electricity consumed, yet it was certain that in making a rule of practice which required a consent of the owner of premises the Department intended to save itself from risk of obstruction or unnecessary litigation with the unwilling owner which may result in some injury and, therefore, the element of injury or risk of injury was present in the case. The considerations that the tenant would be paying for the electricity consumed and that the landlord would not materially suffer if an electric connection which was an ordinary modern amenity was fixed in the leased portion of his house were those that may affect the sentence, but not the criminality of the Act. 1954 Cr LJ 788: ILR (1953) MB 204: AIR 1954 Madh Bha 73 (76) (Prs 23, 24).

——S. 464 — "Forges a document" — Evidence — Proof of — Two persons jointly charged for the same offence — Acquittal of one of them on mere statement under Section 342, Criminal P. C. — Effect.

The two elements which impress upon a document the character of a false document are these. It must be a document dishonestly or fraudulently made and it should have been made with the intention of causing a belief that it was made or executed by or by the authority of a person who did not make or execute it and with the knowledge that it was not so made or executed.

A false document is made not only when the whole of it is made but even in a case where a person makes only a part of it, so that where the charge is of forging a false resolution of a Society, the person who merely writes out the body of the resolution can be said to have prepared a false document within the meaning of Section 464. (1962) 40 Mys LJ 880, Foll.

As the charge against the accused 1 was of forging a resolution of the Board of Directors of the society of which he was only an Assistant Secretary, he could be convicted of the offence of forgery only if the prosecution proved that when the forged copy was prepared the accused knew that the resolution was not passed by the Directors at all.

In the instant case, from the materials on the record, it was clear that it was no part of the Assistant Secretary's duties to keep himself acquainted with the resolutions of the Board of Directors or to post himself with knowledge about the resolutions passed by them from time to time but there was undisputed evidence that the person who would be conversant with the resolutions of the Board of Directors was the Ex-officio Secretary, Accused 2, who was acquitted by the trial Court on his own statement under Section 342, Criminal P. C. It was not possible to say merely by reason of the fact that the resolution referred to therein was proved to be a fictitious resolution, that Accused 1 had knowledge that it was a fictitious resolution, especially when Accused 2 whose duty it was to attend the meetings of the Board of Directors and to be present in those meetings authenticated the same to be a true copy of the resolution, and, therefore, the conviction of Accused No. 1 was not proper.

Where two accused were charged with having in concert brought into existence a forged document and each one of them tried to shift the blame on the other, the exculpation of one and not of the other merely on the statement made by him under Section 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, could not be said to have the support of either reason or justice. 1965 Mad LJ (Cri) 463.

A person is said to make a false document, who dishonestly or fraudulently signs, seals or executes a document or a part of a document or makes any mark denoting the execution of a document with the intention mentioned in Section 464, Indian Penal Code. 'Document' is defined under Section 29, Indian Penal Code. ILR 7 Cal 352 and AIR 1953 Cal 798, Not approved: AIR 1925 Bom 327 and AIR 1951 Patna 86, Foll. (1964) MLJ (Cr) 395: 40 Mys LJ 880.

——S. 464 — False document — Proof of — Signatures on sale form genuine — No evidence that it was not executed on that date — Sale not taking place on that date — Effect.

For the purpose of the charge of forgery, it is immaterial that the document contains recitals which may be false in other respects.

Thus where the prosecution does not allege that the signatures on a document purporting to be a sale form evidencing auction sale of certain cattle in a cattle-pound are not those of persons whose signatures they purport to be nor is there any evidence that the document was made on any day other than the date shown on it, the mere fact that no sale did in fact take place on that date does not render it a false document within Section 464, Penal Code. (e).

A document is forged if it is a false document within the meaning of Section 464. Under this section, the making of a false document is not restricted to the act of signing it. The section is wide enough to cover the making of a document, which really means creating or bringing it into existence, provided the act of signing or marking the document is done dishonestly or fraudulently and with the intention of causing it to be believed that the document or any part of it was made, signed, sealed or executed by the authority of a person, by whose authority the maker knows that it was not made, signed, sealed or executed. The fact that a document bearing even the genuine signature of the maker may be a forged document is apparent from illustration (e) appended to Section 464, Penal Code, as also Illustration (d) to Explanation 1 thereof. AIR 1951 Pat 86, Rel. on.

Held, (i) that the intention of the accused in making and signing the bill, was to cause it to be believed that he had done so by or under the authority of the Deputy Commissioner which to his knowledge never existed. It was, therefore, a false document within the meaning of Section 464, which the accused had made and signed. The accused also successfully caused wrongful loss to the State and wrongful gain to himself by his acts. Having forged the bill for the purpose of cheating, he had used the same as genuine and had by his act cheated the State officers concerned. The accused was, therefore, guilty under Sections 467, 468, 471 and 420, Penal Code. The accused did have the requisite mens rea for commission of the offence of cheating under Section 420 as well as the other offences under Sections 467, 468 and Section 471/467. AIR 1957 SC 466, Disting. (ii) Considering the serious nature of the offences found to have been committed by the accused, the case was not fit to be dealt with under the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958. Sec. 3 did not apply to the facts of the case and Section 4 could not be called in aid of the accused.

Per Anant Singh, J.— The mere assertion of a false claim in a document under one's own signature supported by false and got-up references with a dishonest intention to defraud any one as it was done in this case, would surely amount to making of false document within the meaning of Section 464 of the Penal Code. 1963 (2) Cr LJ 36: AIR 1963 Pat 262 (265 to 268) (Pt A) (Prs 11 to 15, 19, 20) (DB).

The fundamental pre-requisite of Section 464, Penal Code, is that the document must be fraudulent in the sense that it has direct tendency to injure the interest of a third person. Where in a proceeding between a raiyat and his bataidar under Section 144, Criminal P. C. the raiyat produces a deed of exchange of title between him and another raiyat but which contains no recital as to past possession, the deed of exchange even if ante-dated cannot be said to have any prejudical effect upon the interest of the bataidar who claims to be in possession and, therefore, the deed of exchange, even if ante-dated, cannot amount to a false document under Section 464, Penal Code. 1955 BLJR 453: 1956 Cr LJ 647: AIR 1956 Pat 154 (158) (Pt B) (Pr 12).

——Ss. 464, 466, 167 — False document — Making of wrong entries initially not to constitute false document.

To bring the case within Clause (1) of Section 464, Penal Code, it is necessary to establish that the accused intended to induce a belief that a document was made, signed, sealed or executed by the authority of a person who did not make, sign, seal or execute it or that it was made, signed, sealed or executed at a time when it was not so done. Evidently Section 464 cannot be invoked to cases where a public officer knowingly makes false entries initially in the public record on his own authority. Where the prosecution case is not one of subsequent alteration of the document but is essentially one of making initial incorrect and unauthorised entries in the revenue record the making of such entries cannot be said to constitute the making of false document under Section 464. SECTION 467

(Penal Code (1860), S. 467.)

1. Scope.
2. "Forged document".
3. "Purports to be a valuable security".
4. "Receipt acknowledging the payment of money".
5. Evidence and proof.
6. Procedure.
7. Conviction and sentence.

1. Scope.

——Ss. 467 and 464 — Applicability — False recitals or false statement in document — Attesting forged signature — Offence.

Before there can be conviction for forgery, a false document must have been made as defined in Section 464. The mere making of a false statement in a document would not come within Section 464, and would not amount to forgery.

A person who merely attests a forged signature on a document of receipt cannot be convicted of forgery. Before an attestation can amount to forgery, one of the essential requirements is that it must be made or signed by a person by whom it does not purport to be made or signed. AIR 1929 Cal 539, Not foll.

The Explanation to Section 464 explains that the making of a false document amounts to forgery even if the false document made is in the name of a fictitious person. Explanation 2 does not otherwise widen the scope of Section 464. The main part of Section 464 has to be looked into to see if attestation amounts to making a false document. (1961) 2 Guj LR 481: 1961 (2) Cr LJ 76: AIR 1961 Guj 117 (119, 120) (Pt B) (Prs 9a, 10, 11).

——S. 467 — Forgery established — Inference as to offender — Person deriving benefit is the offender.

Once it is established that the signature of 'A' is a forgery and it is further established that the only person who benefited from the forgery is 'B' it is impossible to think of any alternative theory about someone else having committed the forgery without the knowledge and instigation of 'B'. Forgeries are not committed for the sake of mere joke and the reasonable view is that they are committed either by or at the instance of the person who derives some benefit from them. (1960) 2 Ori JD 261.

——Ss. 467, 420, 471 — Ingredients of — Physical presentation of forged document — Not an important ingredient — Reference to presentation of chalans in charge held inconsequential. See Penal Code (1860), Section 420. 1961 (2) Cri LJ 677: AIR 1961 Pat 451 (DB).

——Ss. 467 and 471 — Forgery when complete — Forgery of document and its use as genuine form distinct offenecs — Criminal P. C. (1898), Sections 233, 234.

The offence of forgery or abetment thereof is complete, if a document, false in fact, is made with intent to commit a fraud: AIR 1926 Cal 581, Rel. on.

Forgery of a document or the abetment of forgery, as the case may be, and the use of the forged document as genuine, form distinct and different offences even though they are committed by one and the same person: AIR 1926 Cal 581; AIR 1936 Rang 174 and AIR 1932 Cal 545, Rel. on.

When the forger himself uses the forged document as genuine, there is no prohibition against convicting him of both offences. 1949 TCLR 113 (DB).

2. "Forged document".

——S. 467 — Making a false document — What constitutes — Document purporting to have been issued under authority of high official — Accused getting them typed as though they purported to have been issued by such authority though in fact he knew that they were not so issued — Offence.

The definition of making a false document is very wide. It is not confined only to the execution of a document. It refers to dishonestly or fraudulently making, signing, sealing or executing a document or a part of a document with the intention of causing it to be believed that such document or part of a document was made, signed, sealed or executed by or by the authority of a person by whom or by whose authority he knows that it was not made, signed, sealed or executed or at a time at which he knows that it was not made, signed, sealed or executed.

Held, that the act of the accused in getting the matters contained in Exhibits P-1 and P-15 typed as though they were issued on the authority of the person who was purported to have issued them was sufficient to constitute making of a false document within the definition of Sec. 467 of the Indian Penal Code. 1963 Mys LJ (Supp.), 248 (DB).

See Penal Code (1860), Section 464. 1963 (2) Cri LJ 36: AIR 1963 Pat 262.

——Ss. 467, 405, 409 and 477-A — Property — Meaning — Includes things purchased with money entrusted — A purchasing paddy from B on behalf of Government with the amount entrusted for procuring paddy — In place of voucher given by B, A fabricating false voucher for a lesser amount and forging on it B's signature — A held guilty under Section 467. See Penal Code (1860), Section 405. 1955 Cri LJ 1539: AIR 1955 Trav Co 271 (DB).

3. "Purports to be a valuable security".

——Ss. 467, 30 — Share certificates, list of shares and deeds of transfer of shares are valuable securities — Even if document purports to be a valuable security, it is sufficient — Assuming that transfer deeds cannot be acted upon for want of necessary entries, inasmuch as they purport to be documents whereby a legal right is being transferred, they purport to be valuable securities and are valuable securities within meaning of Section 467. ILR (1962) 1 All 451.

4. "Receipt acknowledging the payment of money".

——Ss. 467, 109 — Accused forging thumb impression of payee of money order—Money not received by payee — Burden of proof.

Where the accused was prosecuted under Section 467, I. P. C. on the allegation that he had forged the thumb impression of the payee by putting his own thumb impression in token of payment to payee and it was established that the amount covered by the money order was not paid to the payee it is for the accused to prove that he did pay the amount covered by the money order to the payee and that the impression found on that voucher is that of the payee. If he fails to do that, he will be liable under Section 467 read with Section 109, I. P. Code. 1956 Mad WN 738: (1956) 2 Mad LJ 427: 1957 Cr LJ 73 (2): AIR 1957 Mad 47 (48) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

The expression 'defraud' involves two elements, namely, deceit and injury to the person deceived. Injury is something other than economic loss that is, deprivation of property, whether movable or immovable, or of money, and it will include any harm whatever caused to any person in body, mind, reputation or such others. Even in those rare cases where there is a benefit or advantage to the deceiver, but no corresponding loss to the deceived, the second condition is satisfied.

Held, on facts that the accused certainly was guilty of deceit for though her name was V she signed in all the relevant papers as N, and made the insurance company believe that her name was N, but the said deceit did not either secure to her advantage or cause any non-economic loss or injury to the insurance company. In the charge framed, she was alleged to have defrauded the insurance company and the only evidence given was that if it was disclosed that N was a minor the insurance company might not have paid the money. On the evidence as disclosed, neither was she benefited nor the insurance company incurred loss in any sense of the term.

In the result the accused was not guilty of the offences under Sections 467 and 468 of Penal Code. ILR (1960) 2 Punj 424, Reversed. Dr. Vimla v. The accused, a Head Constable of Police, who was posted as an accountant in the National Volunteer Corps office withdrew from the Treasury a sum of Rs. 11,579-8-0 on the strength of a contingent voucher being a subsistence allowance for certain month, purporting to be signed by the Senior Superintendent of Police. These signatures were found to be forged and he was convicted of an offence under Section 467 read with Section 471, Penal Code. The embezzlement charge which was levelled against him in regard to this sum of Rs. 11,579-8-0 however ultimately failed. The High Court in appeal confirmed the sentence of 4½ years' rigorous imprisonment awarded by the trial Court and also imposed an additional fine of Rs. 11,579-8-0 on the accused. The accused appealed to the Supreme Court.

Held, that the sentence of 4½ years' rigorous imprisonment was a deterrent sentence deliberately imposed on the accused. The embezzlement charge regarding Rs. 11,579-8-0 had also failed. In these circumstances the High Court should not have imposed this additional fine on the accused. Ram Narain v. State of Punjab, 1955 Cr LJ 871: AIR 1955 SC 322 (324) (Pt C) (Pr 8).

(Penal Code (1860), Section 471).

1. "Dishonestly".
2. Nature of user.
3. Use of copies of forged document.
4. Illustrative cases.
5. Evidence and proof.
6. Procedure.
7. Sanction for prosecution.
8. Conviction and sentence.

1. "Dishonestly".

——Ss. 471, 24 — "Dishonestly" — Wrongful gain — 'Dishonestly' must relate to an advantage to which a party perpetrating a deceit is not legally or equitably entitled. See Penal Code (1860), Section 24. AIR 1953 Nag 165.

2. Nature of user.

——Ss. 471, 467 — Ingredients of — Physical presentation of forged document — Not an important ingredient — Reference to presentation of chalans in charge held inconsequential. See Penal Code (1860), Section 420. 1961 (2) Cri LJ 677: AIR 1961 Pat 451 (DB).

——S. 471 — Essential ingredients — "Use".

The essential ingredients of Section 471, are (i) fraudulent or dishonest use of a document as genuine, and, (ii) knowledge or reasonable belief on the part of the person using the document that it is a forged one.

To constitute a use as contemplated by Section 471, it is not necessary that the forged document should be used as evidence in a Court. It is sufficient that it is used in order that it may ultimately appear in evidence or used dishonestly or fraudulently. The nature of the user is not material. Therefore, in order to bring a person within the purview of Section 471, it is enough if he files a forged document, which he knows or has reason to believe to be forged document 1961 BLJR 369: 1961 (2) Cr LJ 139 (142, 143) (Pt A) (Prs 11, 15, 16, 24).

——S. 471 — Use of certified copies of forged documents — Nature of user — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 195 (1) (c)) — (Evidence Act (1872), Section 63).

The mere filing of a certified copy of a forged document may not amount to user of the forged document within the meaning of Section 471, I. P. Code. But the filing of the certified copy with the knowledge that it is a copy of a forged document would amount to user of the document because when a person files a copy he is using in substance the original itself if the filing is with the knowledge that the copy is the copy of the forged document.

The accused filed certified copies of certain documents on the record of the High Court with the knowledge that they were copies of forged documents with a petition to the effect that they were being filed not as evidence in the case but for the purpose of calling for the originals from the High Court. This petition was not in fact disposed of by the Sessions Judge and his request to the High Court for sending the necessary documents in the ordinary course was not complied with.

Held, that in the circumstances it could not be held that the accused produced the documents in question or used them within the meaning of Section 471, I. P. Code, or in terms of Sec. 195 (1) (c), Cr. P. Code.

Per Sahai, J. — Section 471 provides for punishment of a person who fraudulently or dishonestly uses as genuine any document which he knows or has reason to believe to be a forged document. Section 195 (1) (c) of the Code of Criminal Procedure lays down, among other things, that no Court shall take cognizance of an offence under Section 471 of the Penal Code without a complaint in writing by a Court in which the forged document in question is produced or given in evidence. This shows that a person may be said to have used a document even though he has merely produced it in a Court but it is clear that the offence will be complete only when he produces the document for using it. All cases of production of forged documents by a person will not, therefore, amount to their user within the meaning of Section 471 of the Penal Code. 1955 BLJR 641: 1956 Cr LJ 1091: AIR 1956 Pat 354 (357 to 359) (Pt B) (Prs 7, 10, 14, 15) (DB).

3. Use of copies of forged document.

What Section 471 requires is the use as genuine of any document which is known or believed to be a forged document; it does not lay down that such use can only occur when the original itself is produced, for the Section does not require the production of the original. Where for example, under the Rules under the Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act (44 of 1954), an attested copy would suffice, the production of an attested copy would amount to use of the original document as genuine if it is known or is believed to be a forged document. The difference between Section 471 of the Penal Code and Section 195 (1) (c) of the Code of Criminal Procedure is that while Section 195 (1) (c) requires the production of the forged document itself in a Court to make it necessary for a complaint to be filed before a person can be prosecuted for forging or using such document as genuine, Section 471 does not require the production of the original forged document. Where it is possible to produce an attested copy of the forged document and that attested copy will serve the purpose of the original forged document, there would be use of the original forged document as genuine, through the attested copy. Where therefore an attested copy of a forged document was produced before the Assistant Settlement Officer, it must be held that there was use of the document, which was known or was believed to be forged document within the meaning of Section 471. ——Ss. 471 and 466 — The accused who came to Junagad from Pakistan with a permit was charged under Sections 466 and 471, Penal Code and Section 4, Junagad Act (35 of 1948) on the ground that the permit was not valid inasmuch as (1) the book out of which this permit was given had been stolen and (2) that the rubber stamp of the official of the High Commissioner's Office as well as that of the office itself, seemed to have been forged by somebody, and that the accused must have knowingly used the forged permit for the purposes of entering the Indian Dominion. The only evidence for proving that the permit book was lost was a report made by the High Commissioner's Office to the Government of India, that the permit book had been stolen. The stamp of the official signature as well as the stamp of the office on this permit, did not show in any way that somebody used a different stamp, because both the stamps tallied with the stamps which were affixed on valid permits :

Held, that these facts did not establish that the accused was necessarily privy to the transacion of the theft or that he secured the permit after having known that it was given to him by somebody who was a party to the theft of the permit book. As the rubber stamps were genuine, it could not be said that the permit had been forged by anybody, or that even if it was forged, the accused came into possession after having known that it was forged. The conviction of the accused was, therefore, not sustainable. 3 Sau LR 83: AIR 1950 Sau 9 (10) (Pr 5) (DB).

——S. 471 — Material documents in custody of another Court not produced by prosecution — Discharge of accused held illegal. See Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 209. ILR (1959) 2 Cal 679.

——S. 471 — Applicability — Essential ingredients — Mere negligence or want of prudence not sufficient.

In order to bring a case within the four corners of Section 471, Penal Code, it must be established that the accused knew or had very good reason to believe that it was not the signature of the person by whom the document is said to have been written. If it had been proved that he had been a party to the concoction then also the case under Section 471 would be made out. Where, therefore, both the ingredients are absent the mere negligence or want of prudence where it falls short of the statutory intentions would not be sufficient to bring it within Section 471. The use of a forged document which involves a representation by the accused that it is genuine coupled with a knowledge on the part of the user that it is forged will alone bring it within the purview of Section 471. The mere fact that the document bears a suspicious appearance on the face of it cannot be regarded as prima facie evidence of guilty knowledge of the accused that it is not a genuine document but a forged one. ILR (1951) Hyd 778: 1952 Cri LJ 215: AIR 1952 Hyd 7 (8) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 471 — Use of forged document — Forgery must be proved.

Forgery cannot be presumed as a matter of law. It must be established as any other fact. The mere fact that the purchaser of a property is in possession of a document which is shown to be a forgery would be no evidence of the guilt of the purchaser. ILR (1951) Hyd 778: 1952 Cri LJ 215: AIR 1952 Hyd 7 (8) (Pt C) (Pr 6) (DB).

——Ss. 471, 474 — Knowledge or belief that document was forged — Evidence and proof — Held, that prosecution had not succeeded in establishing that the accused was having possession of document, knowing it to be forged. See Penal Code (1860), Section 474. 1957 Cri LJ 755: AIR 1957 Ker 78.

——S. 471 — Documents forged — No knowledge imputed to accused — Offence under Section 471 not made out — Knowledge means mental cognition.

For conviction under Section 471, I. P. Code, the mere fact that the documents were forged would not conclude the matter, unless it is also established that he was a party to the forgery. It is incumbent on the prosecution to establish beyond reasonable doubt that the accused knew or had reason to believe that the certificates were forged. 'Knowledge' means a mental cognition and not necessarily visual perception., AIR 1927 Nag 40, Rel. on. A person 'has reason to believe' under Section 26, I. P. Code if he has sufficient cause to believe the thing but not otherwise. The mere fact that the suspicions of a pleader ought to have been aroused by the sight of the document was not prima facie evidence that he knew or had reason to believe the document to be forged. 1960 MPLJ (Notes) 10: 1960 Jab LJ 563: 1960 MPLJ 649: 1960 MPC 456: 1960 Cr LJ 1217 (2): AIR 1960 Madh Pra 269 (270) (Pt B) (Prs 7, 8).

——S. 471 — Evidence and proof — Presentation for encashment of National Savings Certificates by one not the real holder — Clerk in post office

——Ss. 471, 467 and 420 — Conviction — Misdirection to jury.

In a trial for offences under Section 467, Sections 471/467 and Section 420, I. P. Code the prosecution case was that after the death of A in whose favour compensation for lands acquired in Land Acquisition proceedings had been awarded, the accused presented an application purporting to be by A supported by a Muktearnama purporting to have been executed by A and thereby induced the authorities to pay out to him the money awarded. It was alleged that at the time he used the documents he knew or had reason to believe that these documents were forged and it was by using them he committed cheating. The verdict of the jury on the charge under Ss. 471/467, I. P. Code was that the accused had not been proved to have used the forged documents with knowledge or reason to believe that it was forged, but the accused was convicted for an offence under Section 420, I. P. Code.

Held, that the verdict of the jury that he was not guilty of the offence under Section 471/467, I. P. Code, was inconsistent with the verdict that he was guilty under Section 420, I. P. Code.

(2) That the misdirection in the Judge's charge to the Jury had led to the erroneous verdict. The conviction was, therefore, set aside. 1965 Cr LJ 513: AIR 1955 Cal 175 (176) (Prs 1, 3, 7) (DB).

——Ss. 474, 471 — Knowledge or belief that document was forged — Evidence and proof.

The conclusion that the accused (a tenant) had possession of a lease-deed knowing it to be a forged document does not necessarily follow from the finding that the document was a forged one.

Where it appeared from the circumstances of the case that the complainant's son, who was an advocate, and his clerk might have brought it into existence with some sinister purpose and the complainant's son and his clerk were not found very reliable regarding the circumstances under which the document passed hands and the object with which they took part in bringing it into existence :

Held, that the prosecution had not succeeded in establishing that the accused was having possession of the document, knowing it to be forged. 1957 Ker LT 293: ILR (1957) Kerala 277: 1957 Ker LJ 329: (1957) Mad LJ (Cr) 227: 1957 Cr LJ 755: AIR 1957 Kerala 78 (79) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

See Penal Code (1860), Section 30. 1963 (1) Cr LJ 279: AIR 1963 All 131.

——Ss. 477 and 30 — Concealment of account books — Account books are not valuable security ordinarily.

Section 30 of the Penal Code means that to become a 'valuable security' the document itself should create the right or liability. Ordinarily speaking, account books do not by themselves create any such right or liability, though they may evidence the existence of such rights or liabilities In other words an account book generally speaking may be valuable evidence but is not valuable security within the definition given in Section 30. That is not to say that under no circumstances can an account book be considered valuable security. For instance, if such books contained entries showing that certain amounts have been received from customers as sales-tax which would be an acknowledgment by the dealer of his liability to turn over those amounts to the Sales-tax Department, then it can be rightly argued that the books themselves are valuable security. 1962 Ker LJ 1075: 1962 Ker LT 815: (1962) 13 STC 1022: 1963 (1) Cr LJ 180: AIR 1963 Ker 68 (69) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Ss. 477 and 30 — Valuable security — Account books — Section 12, Kerala General Sales Tax Act is of no help in proving account books as valuable security.

It is not correct to argue that even without knowing the contents of the account books it is open to the Court to hold that they are valuable security because under the Kerala General Sales Tax Act account books provide a dealer with a right to establish the correctness of his return. All that Section 12 of the Act provides is that an assessing authority before making 'a best of judgment' assessment, shall give the dealer an opportunity to prove the correctness of his return. The dealer's right to prove the correctness of his return is provided by the statute and not by the book which at best can only support his claim that his figures are correct. (Penal Code (1860), Section 477-A.)

1. Scope and applicability.
2. "Falsify".
3. "Intent to defraud".
4. Conviction and sentence.
5. Procedure.

1. Scope and applicability.

●——S. 477-A — Servant — Person being agent of A company and receiving payment for doing its work as agent — Person is agent of A company — Fact of his being full time servant of B company does not mean that he could not be a servant of any other company or other employer. A manager or director of a bank cannot be made liable under Section 477-A by the customer of the bank. 1950 ALJ 808: 1951 All Cri C 12: 1951 All WR (HC) 85.

——S. 477-A — Applicability — Partner of firm — Liability to conviction.

A partner in a firm if appointed as such to manage the business of the firm or to write its accounts acts as its servant. If he falsifies accounts he is liable to be convicted and punished under Section 477-A. AIR 1953 All 660, Dissented from. 69 Bom LR 1413: 1950 Nag LJ 41: ILR (1959) Bom 670: 1959 Cr LJ 1032: AIR 1959 Bom 486 (489) (Pt B) (Pr 15) (DB).

——S. 477-A — Applicability — Falsification of accounts by partner — Offence.

In view of the wordings of Section 477-A, Penal Code, a partner cannot be guilty of the offence under that section. That offence can only be committed by somebody in the employ of another person as a clerk or officer or servant; the falsification can only be committed in respect of the books of accounts of employer. 1959 Cr LJ 964: AIR 1959 Cal 498 (499) (Pr 5).

——S. 477-A — Ingredients.

Section 477-A refers to two kinds of offences namely (1) falsification of accounts; and (2) making of a false entry and, these two offences are distinct and not inter-dependent. The offence of falsification of accounts is one offence although it may cover several entries. ILR (1965) Guj 1006: (1965) 6 Guj LR 925.

——S. 477-A — Applicability — Person charged under must be "Clerk, officer or servant" — Position is different when charge of offence of conspiracy is concerned. AIR 1955 NUC (Hyd) 415 (DB).

——S. 477-A — Essentials.

It is necessary ingredient of the offence under Section 477-A that the person who is charged must be a clerk, officer, servant or an employee

But the position is different so far as the charge of the offence of conspiracy is concerned, as it is a distinct and separate offence. All that is necessary is the establishment of the agreement for the doing of the act which is so punishable. Its being punishable, because it is done by a person in a particular capacity, does not affect the liability of the conspirators for agreeing to commit the act through such other person. They are not liable to punishment for the main offence but for the conspiracy to perpetrate such an offence. AIR 1955 NUC (Hyd) 415 (DB).

——S. 477-A — Clerk or servant.

It is sufficient to satisfy the words of the section 477-A to prove that the person charged under the section is one who volunteers to perform and performs the duties of a clerk or servant whether in fact he is a clerk or servant or not and though he is under no obligation to perform such duties and receives no remuneration. 1957 MWN 495.

——S. 477-A — Scope — Section 477-A consists of two distinct offences. AIR 1955 NUC (Mad) 3922.

——S. 477-A — Applicability — Offence by partner appointed in capacity of clerk, officer or servant, to manage business, falsifying accounts, is liable to punishment. AIR 1955 NUC (Mad) 434.

——S. 477-A — Applicablility — Abetment by employer — Offence by partner, acting as clerk, officer or servant — Other partners cannot commit substantive offence — Employer can commit offence of abetting the commission of such offence — Other partners taking active interest in falsification are guilty of abetment. AIR 1955 NUC (Mad) 434.

——S. 477-A — Banking Companies (Amendment) Act (20 of 1950), S. 11 — Scope — Prosecution on direction of winding up Judge, in addition to orders of local Government in respect of offence under Section 477-A, Penal Code — Section 11 does not apply. See Banking Companies (Amendment) Act (20 of 1950), Section 11. AIR 1952 Mad 727 (DB).

2. "Falsify".

●——S. 477-A — Falsification to cover breach of trust — There is no question of immediate or remote connection with the commission of breach of trust which is sought to be covered up by the falsification, so long as the falsification is to cover that up. R. K. Dalmia v. Delhi Administration, (1963) 1 SCR 253: (1962) 32 Com Cas 699: 1962 (2) Cr LJ 805: AIR 1962 SC 1821 (1878) (Pt X) (Pr 334).

——S. 477-A — 'Falsification of accounts' — Conviction for — Propriety.

No act amounts to a falsification of account unless as provided by Section 477-A there is an intent to defraud or there is a wilful and intentional falsification of accounts.

Where accused No. 1 an Assistant Secretary of a Co-operative Society was charged with having made false entries in the cash book and a current deposit book and also by opening a current deposit account fraudulently in the name of a firm, in the Society's books of accounts, but the actual entries in the cash book and the current deposit book were proved to have been made by accused 3 who was acquitted and all that was established by evidence was that accused 1 had merely affixed his signature at the bottom of the pages in the Society's books in his capacity as its assistant Secretary, the mere fact that he opened a current deposit account could hardly be said to amount to a falsification of accounts, within Section 477-A of the Penal Code.

There was no material in the instant case from which it was possible to say that the opening of the current deposit account by the accused was actuated with any intention to defraud or was otherwise fraudulent or was wilfully made with intent to defraud and hence it was not possible to sustain the charge under Section 477-A, IPC against accused 1. 1965 Mad LJ (Cri) 463.

——S. 477-A — Falsification of accounts — Auditor's reports — How far can protect accused.

Where the accused, who was managing a co-operative stores in a cotton mill and exclusively maintaining the accounts, misappropriated large sums and to cover them up, made false entries in account after deliberation and careful planning and the falsification was sought to be whittled down by suggesting that the accounts had been audited every year by Co-operative Department Officers but there was no evidence that the accounts of the stores had been checked by auditors with the actual entries in the account book and it was clear that the auditors had been misled by confirmation reports.

Held, that the falsification of accounts had been demonstrated beyond doubt and the fact that accounts had been audited every year made no difference. 1957 Mad WN 495.

——S. 477-A — "Falsify" — Meaning of — Expression means "to render false" — (Words and Phrases). AIR 1955 NUC (Mad) 3922.

——S. 477-A — "Falsify" — Preparation of new account book containing false accounts — It is false document — Act in preparing this false document is falsification of document. AIR 1955 NUC (Mad) 434.

——Ss. 477-A and 463 — Forgery and falsification accounts — Scope stated — No act amounts to falsification of accounts unless as provided by Section 477-A there is an intent to defraud or there is a wilful and intentional falsification of accounts. See Penal Code (1860) Section 463. AIR 1967 Mys 86.

——Ss. 477-A. 405, 409, 467 — Property — Meaning — Includes things purchased with money entrusted.

A, a special accountant of certain Pakutty, was entrusted with certain amount for procuring paddy. He purchased 60 paras of paddy from B but credited only 14 paras in the Goverment account and misappropriated the rest. In the receipt given to B the quantity of paddy purchased and amount paid thereof was shown correctly but in the counter-foil A entered only 14 paras. Held, A was guilty of an offence under the Section. 1955 Cri LJ 1539: AIR 1955 Trav-Co 271 (274, 275) (Prs 10, 11, 14) (DB).

——Ss. 477-A, 403 and 409 — Scope — Dishonest misappropriation and falsification of accounts by public servant — Accused an employee of post office not despatching money order and also omitting to enter amount in account books and registers — In counter-foil of receipt issued for the amount accused entering particulars of earlier money order. Accused held had dishonestly misappropriated amount entrusted to him and falsified the accounts. 1953 Cri LJ 1777: AIR 1953 Trav-Co 537 (538) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

3. "Intent to defraud".

●——S. 477-A — 'Intent to defraud' — Concealment of fraud already committed is fraud.

If the intention with which a false document is made is to conceal a fraudulent or dishonest act which had been previously committed, that intention could not be other than an intention to commit fraud. The concealment of an already committed fraud is a fraud. A man who deliberately makes a false document in order to conceal a fraud already committed by him is undoubtedly acting with intent to commit fraud, as by making the false document he intends the party concerned to believe that no fraud had been committed. ——S. 477-A — Intent to defraud — Entering of false bills in accounts — Act is fraudulent — Deprivation of property not necessary.

Section 477A only requires the falsification of accounts with intent to defraud. It does not require any deprivation of property. Where therefore the President and a clerk of a Co-operative Society prepare false and bogus bills regarding sales of certain goods and enter them in the accounts of the society, their act is done with an intent to defraud and is fraudulent within S. 477A, I.P.C. even though nobody is actually deprived of any property. 25 Cal 512 and 35 Cal 450, Foll. 52 Cri LJ 1093: (1951) 1 Mad LJ 691: AIR 1951 Mad 894 (895) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

In order to bring home the guilt under Section 477-A, I. P. C. the prosecution has to prove that the accused had falsified the account books or made false entries therein wilfully with intent to defraud the State. Where the case for the prosecution was that the accused falsified the account books with a view to cover up his own embezzlements and not somebody else's defalcations but the charge of breach of trust against him was not proved then the prosecution case that the accused intentionally and deliberately falsified the account books to cover up his embezzlement must also fail for want of proof. The rejection of the plea of the accused that he made those entries at the dictation of the Treasury Officer does in no way establish the prosecution case that the accused wilfully falsified the account books with the intent to defraud the State. Further there was no legal evidence to show that there was any wrongful removal of moneys from the Treasury. Therefore, the conviction of the accused under Section 477-A, I. P. C. cannot be sustained. (1964) 1 Mys LJ 440: 1965 (1) Cri LJ 565: AIR 1965 Mys 128 (130) (Pt H) (Pr 46).

——Ss. 478, 486 — "Trade mark" — Includes non-registered marks.

In a prosecution under S. 486, the evidence of the complainant need not be confined only to the trade marks registered under the Trade Marks Act, 1940. The expression as defined by S. 478 applies to other marks also. The mere fact that a trade mark has been used for several years by any person is sufficient to hold that trade mark is his and an infringement of it is punishable even though such a trade mark is unregistered. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 1996.

——S. 478 — Trade mark by reputation — When established.

If the Court is not satisfied that the label which is to be found upon an article had been in existence for 10/12 years as made out by the complainant, it is not possible to hold that the label had acquired the reputation of a trade mark within the latter part of S. 478. 1956 Cri LJ 1302: AIR 1956 Bom 700 (703) (Pt A) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Ss. 478, 482 — Trade mark — Infringement of — Mark not registered — Evidence to establish ownership — Trade mark in surname.

What the Court has to determine is whether the Trade Mark claimed by the complainant is distinctive mark, that is to say, a mark which is adopted to distinguish the goods of the proprietor of the particular Trade Mark from those of other persons. For that purpose it is necessary to ascertain the extent to which the user of that Mark has rendered it in effect distinctive of the goods in question.

A declaration of ownership for the purpose of registration is not evidence of legal ownership of a Trade Mark, for such a declaration represents nothing more than the opinion and claim of the declarant.

The right to a surname that a man uses is shared with every person who elects to use the same name and consequently he has no monopoly in it.

Where the complainant was a manufacturer of a fever mixture which had acquired a reputation in fever cases and was sold by the name of Burman's Jury Tap in a red coloured carton with a design which had not been registered, the evidence that is required is that the complainant had established a trade mark in the name Burman and that person bought the complainant's medicine because it was contained in his carton, that is to say, a person who received the complainant's carton would rely on finding in it the medicine which he intended to purchase. If there was no such evidence then any one selling medicine in a carton so similar to that of the complainant as to mislead a purchaser into believing that he was actually purchasing the complainant's medicine would not be infringing the complainant's Trade Mark. AIR 1951 Pat 289 (290) (Pr 2).

——S. 480 — Applicability — Person stocking goods wrapped in wrappers bearing marks which are colourable imitation of genuine marks—Cannot be held to have used any false trade mark or any false property within the meaning of Section 482 — Mere possession of such property does not amount to using such property in the manner contemplated by S. 480. See Penal Code (1860), S. 482. 1958 Cr LJ 1102: AIR 1958 All 643 (DB).

——Ss. 480, 482, 486 — Scope — Colourable imitation of trade-mark — Test.

Section 486, I. P. C. refers to counterfeiting a trade mark or property mark. Where it is not a case of counterfeiting, but of a colourable imitation of the trade-mark, the offence will come under S. 480, I. P. C. punishable under S. 482, I. P. C. and not under S. 486.

The test is not that the trade mark in question is an exact or substantial copy of the trade-mark used by the complainant, but whether the imitation of the trade-mark of the complainant has been done in a manner likely to cause the trade-mark in question to be mistaken for the trade-mark of the complainant. It is the totality of impression which is likely to be left by the trade-marks in the mind of a probable purchaser that has to be considered; the differences on non-essential points are not important. Conviction and sentence altered from S. 486 to one under Section 482, I. P. C. AIR 1954 Pat 102, Disting. 1956 Cr LJ 183: 1955 All LJ 701: AIR 1956 All 132 (132 to 134) (Prs 2, 4).

——S. 480 — Intending purchaser need not be actually deceived.

Section 480 of the Penal Code does not necessarily require that any intending purchaser should actually be deceived. It is sufficient if the deception in question is reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the goods so marked have a connection with the course of trade of a person with whom they have not any such connection. 1960 Cr LJ 220: AIR 1960 Cal 63 (63) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 480 — Question whether accused used wrappers with false trade mark — In absence of evidence, Court can come to its own conclusion.

Where the question is whether the accused used wrappers with false trade-mark thereon, the Court is quite competent in the absence of any evidence to come to its own conclusion after looking at the two wrappers etc. It is within its competence to place itself in the position of an unwary purchaser. 1960 Cr LJ 220: AIR 1960 Cal 63 (63) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

——S. 480 — Sentence — In appropriate cases only condign punishment will meet ends of justice. 1960 Cr LJ 220: AIR 1960 Cal 63 (64) (Pt C) (Pr 14) (DB).

——S. 480 — Offence of using false trade-mark — What prosecution has to prove — Trade-marks bearing different numbers — Offence.

In order to establish a case under S. 480, the prosecution must prove that the accused marked his goods in a manner which reasonably showed to others that the goods so marked were the merchandise of some other person. If there is a distinguishing mark, such as different numbers on the labels, then it cannot be said with any justification that the accused is guilty of passing off. Where the labels fixed on the packages of the complainants' bidis bore No. "16" whereas the labels on the bundles of the bidis of the accused bore No. '19'.

Held, that the accused could not be held guilty under S. 480, I. P. C. 1958 MPC 60: 1958 Jab LJ 70: 1958 All LJ (Rev) 30: 1958 All WR (Sup) 47 (1): 1958 MPLJ 182: 1958 Cr LJ 1041: 1958 All Cr R 164: AIR 1958 Madh Pra 242 (243) (Prs 3, 4, 6).

——Ss. 480, 482, 483, 486 — Counterfeiting of trade mark — Test — Likelihood of deception of unwary purchaser is the real test — Test by comparison of marks side by side is not sound test.

Where a manufacturer is selling his goods under a certain trade mark, the question, whether another manufacturer of such goods using similar mark is likely to deceive the public that they are purchasing the goods so manufactured by the former, is a question of fact to be decided on the evidence adduced; the vital element in such a case is the likelihood or possibility of deception or confusion.

Witnesses can be called to prove the circumstances and the place in which the articles are sold, the classes of persons who buy them, and whether they include persons who are illiterate or ignorant. The test of comparison of the marks side by side is not a sound one.

Section 480, Penal Code, does not necessarily require that any intending purchasers should actually be deceived. It is sufficient, if the deception in question is reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the goods so marked have a connection with the course of trade of a person with whom they have not any such connection. If it is clear, from a simple look, that the get-up of the offending labels or wrappers is closely similar to the get-up of the complainant's goods, and in general appearance, labels and colour section and other essential details of the wrappers of the offending mark so closely resemble those of the complainant's mark, that they are likely to deceive an unwary purchaser who is acquainted with the trade-mark and who trusts his memory in such a case, such use is an offence of counterfeiting trade mark punishable under Penal Code. (1940) 2 Mad LJ 151; AIR 1956 All 132, Rel. on. 1962 (1) Cr LJ 358: AIR 1962 Orissa 52 (53) (Pr 4).

——Ss. 480, 482 — Use of false trade-mark — Test of.

The question in such cases is whether the alleged false trade-mark was likely to deceive the buyers in thinking that they were buying not the goods of actual manufacturer but that they were buying goods of some other manufacturer. The test in such cases is not that the trade-mark in question is an exact or substantial copy of the trade-mark used by the compalinant, but whether the imitation of the trade-mark of the complainant has been done in a manner likely to cause the trade-mark in question to be mistaken for the trade-mark of the complainant.

It is the totality of impression which is likely to be left by the trade-marks in the mind of a probable purchaser that has to be considered. The differences on non-essential points are not important; what is important is the main idea conveyed to the mind by the two trade-marks. If the marking on the goods or on the package in which the goods are marketed, are similar in design, shape, and colour scheme with the marking of the complainant, it must be held that, although there may be differences in details between the two markings, the markings used by the accused were calculated to mislead the buyers.

The test of comparison of the marks side by side is not a sound one, since a purchaser will seldom have the two marks actually before him when he makes his purchase; and marks with many differences may yet have an element of similarity which will cause deception, more especially if the goods are in practice asked for by a name which denotes the mark or the device on it. 1. Applicability.

——S. 482 — Applicability — Person stocking goods wrapped in wrappers bearing marks which are colourable imitation of genuine marks.

Persons who stock goods wrapped in wrappers bearing marks which can be said to be a colourable imitation of genuine marks cannot be held to have used any false trade-mark or any false property mark within the meaning of S. 482, I. P. C. Something is actually to be done by a person before he can be said to have used it. Mere possession, therefore, does not amount to using such property in the manner contemplated by S. 482, I. andise Marks Act (1889), Ss. 6, 7 — Trade Marks Act (1940), Ss. 21, 25.

In all cases where it is alleged that the same kind of goods are being passed off under a counterfeit trade mark, it is the duty of the Court to find out whether or not the mark is counterfeit having due regard to the similarity or otherwise of the marks and the circumstances connected with the case. The principle in all these cases is, what is the effect of the particular trade mark on an unwary purchaser, and whether or not that purchaser would be deceived by the use of that particular trade mark. There may be some difference in the designs and yet the Court may come to the conclusion that the use of marks is calculated to deceive. It is this test which must be applied in considering the question at issue. (1942) 1 All ER 615, Rel. on.

Having due regard to the language of the sections used in the Penal Code, the test is the same. The sections do not require that the user of the mark must actually defraud anyone; the use must be reasonably calculated to cause any person to believe that the goods so marked or any goods contained in any such receptacle were of a nature or quality different from the real nature. 1961 (2) Cr LJ 871: 63 Bom LR 563: 1961 Nag LJ 462: ILR (1961) Bom 841: AIR 1962 Bom 29 (31) (Pt B) (Pr 13) (DB).

——S. 482—Using a false trade mark — Question whether general get-up of bidi katta of accused is colourable imitation of Bidi Katta of complainant — Factor which Court has to take into consideration — Evidence of witnesses — Value of.

In a prosecution under S. 482, Penal Code, for using a false trade mark, where the gravamen of the charge was that the accused marked the tissue paper containers of the Bidi kattas manufactured by them in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be delivered that they were the Bidi kattas of the complainant's firm, the Court has to decide for itself by looking at the two marks whether the general 'get-up' of the katta of the accused is a colurable imitation of the 'Katta' of the complainant.

The evidence of witnesses that the mark of the accused was a colourable imitation or calculated to deceive an unwary purchaser would only be their opinion on matter on which the Judge has to give his decision. He cannot surrender his own dependent judgment to any witness whatever.

Held, on a comparison of the two marks the mark of the accused was a colourable imitation of the mark of the complainant and was likely to deceive an unwary purchaser of the class which usually purchases the bidies in question. The difference in number was not such a prominent variation. 1962 Jab LJ 1091: 1962 MPC 228: 1962 MPLJ 709: 1962 (2) Cr LJ 551 (554) (Prs 8, 9, 11, 12) (Madh Pra) (DB).

Whether similar marks used by the accused was likely to deceive the public that they were purchasing the goods of the complainant is a question of fact to be decided on the evidence on record. The question is the probability of deception, that is whether or not the accused were using a false mark in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the property or goods so marked, or any property or goods contained in any such receptacle so marked belong to a person to whom they do not belong. This may depend, on a number of matters, as well as the question of similarity of marks or of the get-up. AIR 1940 PC 86, Rel. on. (1962) 4 Orissa JD 47.

——Ss. 485 — Burden of proof — S. 28, Expl. 2 — Scope.

The first part of Section 485 is concerned with making or possessing any instrument for the purpose of counterfeiting a trade mark or property mark, whereas, the second part is concerned with possession of a trade mark or property mark for the purpose of passing off.

The general onus of making out the ingredients of the offence rests upon the prosecution and can be discharged by praying in aid the presumption which arises under Expl. 2 to Section 28. It is to be observed, however, that the prosecution must call relevant evidence to lay the foundation for a presumption under Expln. 2 as the presumption, whereby an intention to practise deception can be established, is rebuttable.

A drug company manufactured and sold certain drug in paper cartons with their registered trade mark thereon. On information that spurious drug was being sold with the counterfeit of the said trade mark, it lodged a complaint and in pursuance of a search warrant certain blocks for manufacturing the counterfeit of the trade mark as well as thick paper cartons with the counterfeit trade mark printed upon them were recovered from two printing presses and from the accused, who was charged under S. 485, I. P. Code, under both the parts.

Held, that the possession of the blocks and of a huge quantity of counterfeit cartons, in the circumstances of the case gave rise to the inference that such possession was either for the purpose of counterfeiting a trade mark or for the purpose of passing off.

(2) That the said counterfeit trade mark in the shape of cartons was for the purpose of passing off spurious goods for genuine goods, and that the accused was thus guilty of the offence under Section 485. 1954 Cr LJ 841: 58 Cal WN 96: AIR 1954 Cal 277 (278, 279) (Prs 7 to 9, 12) (DB).

C. See Constitution of India, Art. 20 (2). 1960 Cri LJ 609: AIR 1960 Madh Pra 149.

——Ss. 485 and 486 — Applicability — Infringement of trade mark — Aggrieved party not taking action within time limited by S. 15, Merchandise Marks Act — Prosecution — If barred.

Trade mark offences being principally offences against property are non-cognizable offences, the real complainant being the person directly affected by the infringement in question. If the sufferer, therefore, does not proceed to take action within time envisaged by the relevant provisions of a special Act embracing the field the penal provisions of Indian Penal Code cannot keep the remedy alive.

Where the prosecution for offences under Sections 485, 486, I. P. Code were started more than three years after its commission and the aggrieved persons whose trade marks had been infringed had not taken any action for all these years the prosecution would be barred in view of Section 15, Merchandise Marks Act. 1960 Cr LJ 1656: AIR 1960 Punj 641 (642) (Pt B) (Prs 5, 6).

3. Taking of precautions.
4. Burden of proof.
5. Innocently — Meaning of.
6. Counterfeit — Meaning of.
7. Procedure.

1. Applicability.

——S. 486 — Complaint against company and its two directors under Ss. 6 and 7 and Sections 486, 485 and 482. I. P. C. — No proof of guilty intention against directors — Applying false description to goods — What is — Company held guilty under Section 6 — No offence by directors. See Merchandise Marks Act (1889). ——S. 486 — Offence under — Essentials — Long existence of label not proved — No imitation or infringement.

It is not necessary to constitute an offence, under Section 486 that the label should be exactly identical. If there is similarity between the two labels so as to mislead an unsuspecting customer, the requirement of the law is satisfied. But where upon the evidence it is found that the complainant has not proved that his label had been in existence for 10 to 12 years as suggested by him, it is not possible to hold that the accused has committed an infringement of the label. If it had been shown by the complainant that his label was in existence for a long time, that is to say, for at least 10 to 15 years, then it would be possible to hold that there was a resemblance between the labels. 1956 Cr LJ 1302: AIR 1956 Bom 700 (703) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

P. C See Merchandise Marks Act (1889), S. 2 (3). 52 Cri LJ 431: AIR 1951 Bom 45 (DB).

——S. 486 — Applicability — Infringement of trade mark — Wrapper of certain soap — Protected marks not used by accused — No infringement — (Indian Merchandise Marks Act (1889), S. 7).

Where, though the word 'Rexona' was registered under the Trade Marks Act and a label with certain marks shown in the certificate of registration was also found to have been protected by registration, the complainant-Company had not trade mark right in respect of the wrappers of 'Rexona', and no evidence was given that any purchaser was likely to be deceived by the wrappers used by the accused as the marks shown in the registration certificate of 'Rexona' did not appear on the wrappers of the 'Rihana' which was being manufactured by the accused.

Held, that the accused could not be convicted of an infringement of trade mark. 1960 Cr LJ 222: AIR 1960 Cal 119 (119) (Pr 5) (DB).

2. Counterfeiting of trade mark — Tests.

——Ss. 486, 28 — Counterfeit trade mark — What is — Article repainted including trade mark — Trade mark is not counterfeit.

A counterfeit trade mark is one by means of which resemblance to a genuine article is intended to deceive or to lead a purchaser to imagine that the counterfeit is in reality the genuine article. Therefore, if a trade mark of a company is put on an article belonging to or manufactured by that company, then the trade mark is not counterfeit. An article does not cease to be the manufacture of a particular company merely because it has become old or the trade mark on it has faded. Thus if a "Hercules" bicycle is repainted including its trade mark it cannot be said that the trade mark is counterfeit. Similarly, if a trade mark label on a bottle is torn off and another is affixed, it cannot be suggested that the trade mark is counterfeit because the article being genuine, there can be no intention to deceive. (Ingredients of offence under Section 486 stated). 1962 All LJ 1038: 1962 All Cr R 455: 1962 All WR (HC) 821: 1963 (1) Cri LJ 282: AIR 1963 All 133 (134) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

——S. 486 — Scope — Colourable imitation of trade mark — Test — Test is not that the trade mark in question is an exact or substantial copy of trade mark used by complainant, but whether the imitation is likely to cause trade mark of question to be mistaken for the trade mark of the complainant — Offence of colourable imitation of trade mark falls under Section 480 and not under S. 486. See Penal Code (1860), S. 480. 1956 Cri LJ 183: AIR 1956 All 132.

——S. 486 — Counterfeiting trade mark — Tests — Duty of Court indicated — In all cases where it is alleged that the same kinds of goods are being passed off under a counterfeit trade mark, it is the duty of the Court to find out whether or not the mark is counterfeit having due regard to the similarity or otherwise of the marks and the circumstances connected with the case. 3. Taking of precautions.

——S. 486 (c) — Failure to take reasonable precautions — Moreover accused having reason to suspect genuineness of mark upon goods sold by him — Held, accused's act did not fall under S. 486 (c). 54 Bom LR 795: 1953 Cri LJ 408: AIR 1953 Bom 85 (88) (Pt C) (Pr 7) (DB).

——S. 486 (a) — Taking of precautions — Question of gross negligence.

The statute requires taking of precautions, and if precautions are not taken that is an infringement of the statute, if subsequently it is found that the article which was sold or kept for sale bore a counterfeit trade mark. That is apart from the fact that really speaking there is no such thing from the real point of view as gross negligence. Negligence is the breach of duty to take proper care and once there is a breach of that duty, it does not make any difference from the legal point of view how gross or how small that breach is. 54 Bom LR 795: 1953 Cri LJ 408: AIR 1953 Bom 85 (88) (Pt D) (Pr 7) (DB).

4. Burden of proof.

——S. 486 — Burden of proof — Trade mark on articles not proved to be counterfeit — There is no question of proving innocence of accused.

It is only when it is proved that an accused person has sold or exposed or had been in possession for sale or any purpose of trade or manufacture any goods or things with a counterfeit trade mark that the onus will lie on him to show that he acted honestly and did not commit an offence. Where it is not proved that the trade marks on the articles recovered from the accused are counterfeit, there can be no question of the accused proving his innocence. 1962 All LJ 1038: 1962 All Cr R 455: 1962 All WR (HC) 821: 1963 (1) Cr LJ 282: AIR 1963 All 133 (134) (Pt B) (Pr 7).

——S. 486 — Onus of proof — Nature of.

Section 486, I. P. Code, casts an onus upon the person charged which has to be discharged in compliance with the provisions of the section itself. Once the prosecution has laid the foundation of a charge by proving generally the circumstances which would lead to a reasonable inference that an offence under Section 486 has been committed it becomes the duty of the person charged to prove the circumstances set out in the section in order that he might reasonably claim an acquittal. Ordinarily, speaking, the onus lies on the prosecution, but in a case of this kind where a specific provision in the Code, punishing the offence lays a burden on the person charged, he has to discharge the onus that has been laid upon him. In this sense, therefore, Section 486 is indeed different from the other sections of the Code. 1956 Cr LJ 738: AIR 1956 Cal 260 (262) (Pt C) (Pr 7).

5. Innocently — Meaning of.

——S. 486 — "Reasonable precautions" — Meaning of — Mens rea — Proof — Necessity.

The offence of counterfeiting will be complete as soon as the various acts mentioned in the section as forming ingredients of the offence have been established. The section makes no reference to mens rea or a guilty state of mind. After the proof of the essential ingredients, the burden shifts on to the accused to prove the existence of circumstances, which will take the case either within the ambit of Clauses (a) and (b) or Clause (c). Clause (c) will apply only when first two clauses do not come into operation. The words "having taken all reasonable precautions" in Cl. (a) must be read in conjunction with the concluding words of that clause, namely 'had no reason to suspect the genuineness of the mark" That means that the precautions, which the accused is expected to take, have relation to the examination of mark and his coming to the conclusion that after having taken all reasonable precautions, he had no reason to suspect that the mark was a false or a counterfeit mark. The very fact that accused No. 1 (owner) thought it fit to give specific instructions to accused No. 2 his servant not to deal in objectionable goods, indicates that accused No. 1 had suspicion in that respect. It may also be said that he had a guilty conscience in that matter, where he was already prosecuted once and had given an undertaking that he would not deal in objectionable goods. 63 Bom LR 69: 1961 Nag LJ 71: 1961 (2) Cri LJ 66: ILR (1961) Bom 248: AIR 1961 Bom 203 (205) (Pt A) (Prs 9, 10) (DB).

——S. 486 — Mens rea — If essential ingredient.

The language of Section 486 by necessary implication leads to the inference that mens rea in its ordinary sense, does not form an essential ingredient for an offence under Section 486. There should be mens rea in the sense of an intention to do a thing forbidden by law. The very fact, that the accused has kept in the shop goods containing counterfeit trade mark shows by necessary implication that he has an intention to do an act which is forbidden by the statute. (1925) 1 KB 129 and (1951) 2 KB 631 and AIR 1953 Bom 85, Rel. on. 63 Bom LR 69: 1961 Nag LJ 71: 1961 (2) Cri LJ 66: ILR (1961) Bom 248: AIR 1961 Bom 203 (206) (Pt B) (Pr 12) (DB).

——S. 486 (c) — "That otherwise he had acted innocently" — Words explained — Innocently means 'without any intention to do the act which was forbidden by the statute', and the words "that otherwise he acted innocently" have application where the accused had acted inadvertently or under a misapprehension or mistake of fact. 54 Bom LR 795: 1953 Cri LJ 408: AIR 1953 Bom 85 (87, 88) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 6) (DB).

——S. 486 — Burden of proof — "Innocently"— Meaning — Question of mens rea — Proof of.

In the case of a prosecution for offence under S. 486, I. P. Code, if the accused can show that he had taken all reasonable precautions against committing the offence and that he had at the time of the commission of the alleged offence no reason to suspect the genuineness of the mark on the article his case comes within Cls. (a) and (b) of the section.

"Innocently" means "without any intention to do the act which was forbidden by the statute". What the statute forbids is the selling or keeping for sale of an article which has got upon it a counterfeit trade mark without making enquiries and without having any reason to suspect the genuineness of its trade mark. If therefore, no enquiries which ought to have been made and there is reason to suspect the genuinenes of the trade mark, it cannot be said that there is absence of any intention to do the act which was forbidden by the statute. In such cases mens rea for the statute is not the same as in cases where the prosecution had to show a particular state of mind. It is sufficient to show that there was an intention on the part of the accused to do the act forbidden by the section. 22 Bom Cri Cas 8: 54 Bom LR 795: 54 Cr LJ 408: AIR 1953 Bom 85 (87) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

6. Counterfeit — Meaning of.

——S. 486 — 'Counterfeit' — Meaning — Colourable imitation — Exact imitation not essential — Existence of resemblance which might cause deception is enough to raise presumption of intention to deceive. See Penal Code (1860), S. 28. 1960 Cr LJ 1017: AIR 1960 SC 669.

——S. 486 — 'Counterfeit' — Meaning of — Colourable imitation.

A counterfeit trade mark would be a trade mark which purports to be a genuine trade mark but is in reality not so and it would so purport only when it is a copy of the other,though not an absolutely exact copy in every detail.

A mark can be said to be a colourable imitation of another mark when it is not really an imitation of any other mark but just appears to be so and can pass off as such. Where the soap cakes recovered from the possession of the accused do not purport to be Sunlight soap, but the labels have different names and do not repeat all what is written or printed on the genuine label of the Sunlight soap, the labels recovered are therefore, colourable imitation of the genuine labels of Sunlight soap and are not counterfeit. AIR 1911 Sind 163. Rel. on. In view of this no offence under S. 486 can be said to have been committed by the accused. 1958 Cr LJ 1102: AIR 1958 All 643 (645, 648) (Pt B) (Prs 12, 31) (DB).

No doubt counterfeiters are pests of society and any attempt at exterminating them wih an iron hand will be commendable, but the theory of 'the end justifying the means' is not to be followed by Police Officers in the collection of evidence even though it may be extremely difficult to get really clever criminals convicted by honest investigation. Investigating Officers should bear in mind that investigation into criminal offences must always be free from any objectionable features or infirmities which may lead to grievance of accused that investigation was carried on unfairly or with ulterior motive. The administration of criminal justice requires that every act done by the agency responsible for the investigation of crime must be fair, upright and free from any fault of any sort. ILR (1962) 2 Ker 492: (1962) 2 Ker LR 499: 1962 Ker LT 996: 1963 Ker LJ 86: 1963 (1) Cri LJ 669 (674) (Pt G) (Pr 33) (Kerala) (DB).

——Ss. 489-B, 489-C — Applicability — Suspicion about genuineness of currency note — Sufficiency for conviction.

Under Ss. 489-B and 489-C, guilt is fastened on the ground of 'knowledge' or 'reason to believe'. The two are more or less ejusdem generis though knowledge will be on a slightly higher plane than reason to believe. But suspicion or doubt is not sufficient for fastening liability under S. 489-B or 489C. Nor can suspicion or doubt be raised to the level of reason to believe.

Suspicion whether the notes were genuine will not amount to sufficient cause to believe. The word 'believe' involves the necessity of showing that the circumstances were such that a reasonable man must have felt convinced in his mind that the note with which he was dealing was a forged one, and it was not sufficient to show that the accused was careless or he had reason to suspect or that he did not make sufficient enquiry to ascertain the fact.

Where uneducated rustic persons, in the usual course of business, get a currency note which they find to be suspicious and try to get rid of it, they are not guilty either under S. 489-B or 489-C. 1961 (2) Cr LJ 801: AIR 1961 Tripura 46 (48, 49) (Pt B) (Prs 19 to 21).

SECTION 489-C

——S. 489-C — Persons charged of criminal conspiracy — Proof of their meeting together and deciding to commit illegal act is not necessary — This can be decided with reference to acts done by each of them — It is therefore, not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the different accused had met together and had entered into an agreement for purpose of smuggling and uttering forged notes before they could be convicted for the offence of criminal conspiracy. See Penal Code (1860), S. 120-A. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 3583.

——Ss. 489-C and 120-A — Conspiracy to utter forged notes — Different accused joining at different stages — Conspiracy if one.

Merely because different accused obtained forged notes from different persons and uttered them at different times and at different places, it cannot be said that there was no criminal conspiracy. The object of conspiracy being to print, smuggle and utter forged notes in different parts of the country through different agents, it is immaterial at what stage the accused joined the conspiracy. AIR 1955 NUC (All) 3583.

——S. 489-C — Charge under Ss. 120-B and 489-C — Legality — Where substantive offences all committed in pursuance of a conspiracy accused can charged with the substantive offences along with offence of criminal conspiracy — There is no illegality in a charge under Ss. 120-B & 489-C. ——S. 489-C — Mens rea — Intention to use forged notes as genuine, or that they might be used as genuine, is essential.

For an offence under S. 489-C, it is essential to establish that the accused intended to use the forged notes as genuine or that they might be used as genuine. Where at the time of recovery of the forged notes from the accused he was at his own house, sitting in his verandah all alone, it could not conclusively be inferred that, while possessed of the forged notes the accused also intended to use them as genuine or that they might be used as genuine and his conviction could not be upheld. 1961 (2) Cri LJ 536: AIR 1961 Pat 405 (405) (Pr 8).

——S. 489-D — Charge under — Unexplained possession of blocks for counterfeiting currency notes — Mens rea — Inference.

It is not necessary that the outfit for counterfeiting should be perfect or complete. Possession of blocks for counterfeiting currency notes unaccounted for, may itself lead to an inference of guilty knowledge or intention. AIR 1958 Mad 392 and AIR 1925 Lah 22, Ref. 1959 An LT 562.

——S. 489-D — Requirements of offence under.

A successful counterfeiting with the materials recovered is not a sine qua non for a conviction under S. 489-D. For constituting an offence under the section, all that is necessary is that the materials found must be part of the outfit for counterfeiting. Cumulative usefulness of all the materials found should be the guiding factor, while determining usefulness for counterfeiting: AIR 1928 All 754, Rel. on. 1960 Ker LJ 1343.

——S. 489-D — Intention when can be inferred.

Where the accused are found to be in possession of the materials which are intended to be used for forging or counterfeiting any currency notes or bank notes or any portion thereof, they are guilty under S. 489-D of the Penal Code. When the prosecution successfully proves that the material objects found from possession of the accused and according to the opinion of the expert some of them can be used for forging counterfeit currency notes, the necessary inference that the accused intended to use the materials for the purpose of counterfeiting currency notes can be drawn. ('59) 25 Cut LT 307.

——S. 489-D — Burden of proof.

The burden is on the prosecution to show that the accused was occupying the house wherefrom the instruments for forging currency notes were recovered and that he had joint possession or control over the instruments with the other accused or at least that they were brought there with his knowledge. 1953 Cr LJ 1249: AIR 1953 Trav-Co 225 (226) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 489-D — "Has in his possession ..... or material".

Every case must depend upon its particular facts and the Court must consider each case and come to a conclusion whether it is proved that incriminating article was in the possession of any particular person or in the possession of more than one person. It is fallacious to think that the possession must be exclusive; it might well be possession of two or more persons. 1953 Cr LJ 1249: AIR 1953 Trav-Co 225 (228) (Pt B) (Pr 10) (DB).

——S. 493 — Essentials of offence.

The essence of the offence under S. 493 consists in the practice of deception by a man on a woman, in consequence of which she is led to believe that she is lawfully married to him even though, in fact, they are not lawfully married. To prove deception it must be conclusively established that the accused either dishonestly or fraudulently concealed certain facts, or made a false statement knowing it to be false.

Where some sort of marriage ceremony took place between the petitioner, a Brahmin aged 22 years (with his wife living) and a Bhahmin widow, the woman being made to wear new clothes and put on new bangles and also vermillion mark on her forehead, there being also an exchange of garlands between the two, and the entire prosecution evidence was consistent with the view that both parties thought that those ceremonies would suffice to constitute a valid marriage, the element of deception is wanting in the case.

The petitioner's subsequent conduct in deserting her after she became pregnant and in even repudiating the marriage, though an important piece of evidence, will not suffice by itself to show that at the time when he participated in the ceremonies he intended to deceive her. 22 Cut LT 503: 1957 Cri LJ 989: AIR 1957 Orissa 198 (198, 199) (Prs 4, 5).

——S. 494 — Performance of ceremonies — Existence of previous wife — Validity of marriage.

In order that an offence under S. 494 may be committed it is necessary, at least, that all the ceremonies which are necessary to be performed in order that a valid marriage may take place, ought to be performed and, ordinarily, all these ceremonies would amount to a valid marriage but for the fact that the marriage becomes void on account of the existence of a previous wife. 60 Bom LR 428: ILR (1958) Bom 700: 1960 Cr LJ 1189: AIR 1960 Bom 393 (394) (Pt C) (Pr 9).

——S. 494 — Applicability — Christain marrying again Hindu woman according to Hindu rites — Offence.

In order that a person may be convicted of an offence of bigamy, under S. 494, the second marriage must be a form of marriage recognised by law, otherwise it would be simply an adulterous union and it will not be hit by the provisions of S. 494. Where A, a born Christian and having a Christian wife living, marries once again a Hindu woman, the marriage being celebrated according to Hindu rites the subsequent marriage between A and the Hindu woman is a void marriage not because of the existence of the Christian wife of A but because of the fact that there cannot be a valid form of marriage between an Indian Christian and a Hindu woman celebrated according to Hindu rites. And as one of the essential ingredients of S. 494, namely, that the second marriage must be void by reason of its taking place during the lifetime of the husband or the wife of the first marriage, is not satisfied, A, when prosecuted under S. 494, deserves to be acquitted. AIR 1919 Lah 389; 18 Cal 264, Disting. ILR (1957) 2 Cal 249: 1955 Cr LJ 1347: AIR 1955 Cal 533 (534) (Pr 7) (DB).

——S. 494, read with Hindu Marriage Act (25 of 1955), S. 17 — Conviction and sentence under — Hindu Marriage Act (25 of 1955), S. 7 (1) and (2) — Second marriage contracted during the subsistence of first marriage — First marriage solemnised by tying 'Tali' according to caste custom and not observing 'saptapadi' — Effect — Whether non-performance of Saptapadi would render the first marriage null and void.

It is clear from S. 7 (1) of the Hindu Marriage Act, that a Hindu marriage may be solemnized, in accordance with the customary rites and ceremonies of either party thereto. Under S. 7 (2) of the Act, where such rites and ceremonies include the 'Saptapadi' that is the taking of the seven steps by the bridegroom and the bride jointly before the sacred fire, the marriage becomes complete where the seventh step is taken. This shows that, Saptapadi, is not a necessary ceremony in all Hindu marriages and that only in those marriages where Saptapadi is an essential ceremony the marriage becomes complete by the bridegroom and the bride taking seven steps. The evidence in the instant case is that the complainant was married to the petitioner according to the caste custom by tying 'Tali' and it was not even suggested to the complainant or other witnesses that Saptapadi is an essential ceremony for the validity of the marriage in the community of the parties. Thus the non-performance of Saptapadi would not render the first marriage null and void. 1963 Mad LJ (Cr) 84: 76 Mad LW 198: (1963) 1 MLJ 66.

——S. 494 — Reconversion to Hinduism — Right of convert — It is the law that a man on reconversion acquires the right of the religion which he re-enters subject to any law taking away particular right. Thus a native convert to Christianity may relapse in the Hindusim and marry a Hindu girl in spite of his marriage with a Christian girl when he was Christian. 64 Mad LW 469: 1951 Mad WN 440: (1951) 1 Mad LJ 694: 1951 Mad WN (Cri) 120: 52 Cri LJ 1085: AIR 1951 Mad 888 (889) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

——S. 494 — Applicability — Conditions.

The expression 'marries in any case in which such marriage is void by reason of its taking place during the life of such husband or wife' merely means that the person who marries a second time during the life of his or her first spouse would be punished under S. 494 only if such second marriage is not recognised by the personal law by which he or she is governed. The section does not require that the second marriage with the person concerned must otherwise be valid according to law. ——Ss. 494, 107, Explanation 2 — Holding of Antarpat by accused — A person holding the 'Antarpat' during marriage, with full knowledge of the fact that the marriage is void being bigamous is guilty of abetment of the offence of bigamy. Where A, a Hindu, contracted a second marriage with B during the life-time of his first wife after the coming into force of the Hindu Marriage Act, the marriage would be void by virtue of the provisions of Ss. 5, 11 and 17 of the Hindu Marriage Act and if B thereafter marries a second husband during the lifetime of A, B cannot be held to be guilty of the offence of bigamy under S. 494, because in order that an offence of bigamy can be committed, there must be at the time of the second ceremony of marriage a previous valid subsisting marriage. Section 17 of the Hindu Marriage Act does not provide that Ss. 494 and 495, I. P. ——S. 494 — Subsistence of first marriage — No evidence of divorce according to caste custom or according to S. 13, Hindu Marriage Act.

In a charge under S. 494, the essential question is whether the complainant was the legally married wife of the accused, and the marriage is still subsisting and whether during subsistence of the said marriage the accused married another person as his second wife. Where marriage of the complainant with the accused was admitted and there was nothing to show that parties had taken recourse to S. 13 of Hindu Marriage Act (25 of 1955) or had secured valid divorce according to custom, the marriage must be considered to subsist. 30 Cut LT 294: 1964 All WR (Sup) 33: 1964 All Cr R 463: (1964) 6 Orissa JD 160.

——S. 494 — Applicability and scope — (Muhammadan Law — Divorce).

Under Muhammadan Law, when there is a contract between husband and wife at the time of marriage, empowering the latter to divorce herself in specific contingencies and which she exercises at the happening of any of them, the divorce will take effect to the same extent, as if it had been pronounced by the husband. It does not require any declaration from a Court of law. The power given to her by the husband is in itself quite sufficient, and the marriage with the girl after such a divorce does not bring home offence under S. 494. 1953 Cr LJ 1504: AIR 1953 Tripura 6 (1) (6) (Pr 4).

5. Complaint.

——S. 494 — Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 198, 4 (1) (h) — Abetment of offence under S. 494, I. P. C. — Section 198 applies — Deposition is not a complaint — Where an accused is challaned for offences under S. 366, I. P. C. the Court cannot frame charge under S. 494 read with S. 114 in the absence of a complaint by the husband of the girl. Though certain statements made in the deposition of the complainant may amount to a complaint of an offence under S. 494 they do not constitute a complaint within the meaning of S. 4 (h). See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 198. 1955 Cri LJ 1359: AIR 1955 Madh Bha 176.

——S. 494 — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 198 — Offence under S. 4 (2), Madras Hindu (Bigamy Prevention and Divorce) Act — Section 198 applies — Procedure prescribed by S. 198, Criminal P. C. applies when Court is called upon to take cognizance of an offence under S. 494. An offence punishable under S. 494 even read with S. 4 (2) of the Madras Hindu (Bigamy Prevention and Divorce) Act is an offence falling under Ss. 493 to 496 within the meaning of S. 193, Cr. P. C. Court cannot therefore, take cognizance of an offece under S. 4 (2) of the Madras Act unless a complaint in respect thereof is filed by the aggrieved party. 1952 Cri LJ 434: AIR 1952 Mad 193 (DB).

6. Evidence and proof.

——S. 494 — Applicability — Plea of divorce — Custom of divorce — Proof — Evidence regarding existence of custom — Deed of Farkati — Effect.

The mere fact that the complainant's wife had stated in the complaint that no farkati (deed of divorce) had been passed by her cannot be treated as an admission that there was a customary right of divorce by farkati in her community. Though the statement in the Farkati deed that there is a customary right of divorce may be taken into consideration it cannot be conclusive in a criminal case when both the parties have led evidence on the point. Such statements cannot debar her from prosecuting her husband for bigamy. 1961 (2) Cr LJ 469 (470) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (Guj) (DB).

——S. 494 — Plea of divorce — Custom of divorce — Antiquity — Proof.

Before a custom of private divorce can be held to be proved, it must be proved that it was observed continuously and uniformly for a long time and has thereby obtained the force of law in any local area, tribe, community, group or family. Instances which carry one back at the most 15 to 20 years are not sufficient to prove such a customary right of divorce. AIR 1941 PC 21 and AIR 1959 Bom 54, Rel. on. 1961 (2) Cr LJ 469 (470) (Pt C) (Pr 7) (Guj) (DB).

——S. 494 — Scope — Invalidity of second marriage — Onus — Existence of deed of divorce — Effect — Duty of prosecution.

In a prosecution under S. 494, the prosecution has to prove (1) that there was a first marriage, (2) that the first marriage was not dissolved by law; (3) that the parties to the first marriage did not have the customary right of dissolution of marriage or that they did have the customary right of divorce but the marriage was not in fact dissolved by act of parties based on a customary right of divorce. In a case where there was a deed of divorce, the prosecution must prove that the marriage could not be dissolved by customary right of divorce. In a prosecution under S. 494 when reliance is placed by the defence on the deed of divorce between the parties, the burden is on the complainant to prove that there was no customary right to divorce in the community, and that therefore, the Farkati (deed of divorce) has no effect in law, that, therefore, the first marriage was not dissolved and that consequently the second marriage was void. 1961 (2) Cri LJ 462 (471) (Pt D) (Prs 8, 9) (Guj) (DB).

——S. 494 — 'Marries' — Connotation of — Accused must have gone through legal form of marriage — Parties to second marriage Hindus — Ceremonies such as Saptapadi required by Section 7 (2), Hindu Marriage Act, to make marriage complete and binding not proved — Merely from presence of priest at alleged marriage presumption that all ceremonies must have been performed cannot be drawn — Offence of bigamy — Conditions to be proved by prosecution indicated. AIR 1962 Andh Pra 311, Dissented. 1965 Kash LJ 125: 1965 (2) Cri LJ 640: AIR 1965 J and K 105 (107, 108, 110) (Pt A) (Prs 11, 13, 14, 24) (DB).

——S. 494 — Offence of bigamy — Evidence of second marriage — Second marriage must be clearly proved — Evidence Act (1872), Section 50, Proviso.

Though under S. 32 (5) of the Indian Evidence Act, the statement of a person who had special means of knowledge is relevant in proof of the existence of any relationship by blood, marriage or adoption and S. 50 has rendered that opinion as to relationship admissible, the proviso to S. 50 makes such opinion insufficient to prove a marriage in proceedings under the Indian Divorce Act or in prosecutions under Ss. 494, 495, 497 or 498 of Indian Penal Code. That would mean that since the second marriage is an essential ingredient of the offence of bigamy, that marriage has to be clearly proved by the prosecution. ——S. 494 — Offence of bigamy — Form of marriage not opposed to customs of community or caste of parties — Presumption is that marriage was legal — Hindu Marriage Act (1955), S. 17.

When there is celebration or solemnisation of a marriage which has been intended by the parties to be binding on each other and the form of it has not been wholly opposed or against the customs of the community or the caste to which the parties belong, the presumption that the ceremonies were complete and the marriage is legal arises and the presumption of the marriage can be rebutted only by strong, satisfactory and conclusive evidence. ——S. 494 — No satisfactory evidence of performance of ceremonies of valid marriage took place — Offence under S. 494 held not made out.

In order that an offence under Section 494 may be committed, it is necessary that all the ceremonies which are necessary to be performed in order that a valid marriage may take place, ought to be performed and ordinarily all the ceremonies would amount to a valid marriage but for the fact that the marriage becomes void on account of the existence of a previous wife.

When the evidence was not satisfactory to make out that any valid marriage took place between the accused R and L it cannot be said that an offence under S. 494, I. P. Code, had been made out against the accused. AIR 1955 Cal 533 and AIR 1960 Bom 393, Rel. on. 29 Cut LT 404: ILR (1963) Cut 464.

7. Defence.

——S. 494 — Mens rea — Necessity.

A penal statute requires mens rea even if it contains no express words to that effect. If a person charged with bigamy believed that he was legally free to marry again it cannot be said that the crime was committed either intentionally or recklessly and the question whether the belief was unreasonable is irrelevant.

Thus, where the first accused took learned opinion that she could effectively divorce the complainant and went through the formalities thereof, she then gave notice to the complainant, waited for some time and then married the third accused.

Held, that there could be no criminal knowledge that her first marriage with the complainant was subsisting when she entered into the second marriage and so the accused 1 and 3 were not guilty of offence under Section 494. 1959 Mad LJ (Cr) 262: 1958 Ker LJ 1129: 1958 Ker LT 1042: ILR (1959) Ker 18: 1959 Cr LJ 591: AIR 1959 Ker 151 (153, 154) (Pt B) (Prs 12, 13) (DB).

8. Practice and procedure.

——S. 494 — Applicability — Test — Bigamous marriage — Giving birth to child — Evidentiary value — In a case under Section 494 filed by a wife against her husband the circumstance that the co-respondent gave birth to child only amounts to evidence of the fact that she had sexual relationship with a man. It may be a circumstance to support the other evidence of a bigamous marriage if it exists. It is not a consequence within the meaning of Section 179 Cr. P. C. and does not give jurisdiction to the Court to try the offence under S. 494. See Cr P. Code (1898), S. 179. 1959 Cr LJ 14: AIR 1959 All 67.

——S. 494 — Jurisdiction — Trial — Complainant's wife removed from his house in Kanpur District and remarried in Gonda District — Jurisdiction of Kanpur Court to try offence of bigamy — Kanpur Court has no jurisdiction. See Cr. P. Code (1898), S. 179. 1955 Cri LJ 897: AIR 1955 All 363.

——S. 494 — Applicability — Charge under section — Onus — Ordinary rules of criminal jurisprudence — Applicability — Rule of presumption of innocence and the burden of proof in criminal cases should be applied to cases of bigamy with the same strictness and vigour as are applied to other criminal cases. ——S. 494 — If during the continuance of a valid marriage a woman has a sexual intercourse, with another man, that would be illicit intercourse, even though she may have contracted a bigamous marriage with that person. SECTION 495

(Penal Code (1860), S. 497.)

1. Scope and applicability.

3. "Wife of another".
4. Consent or connivance of husband.
5. Who can complain.
6. Evidence.
7. Charge.
8. Practice and procedure.
9. Sentence.

1. Scope and applicability.

——S. 497 — Ingredients.

Enticement or detention are not ingredients of an offence under Section 497, Penal Code. 1952 Cri LJ 258: AIR 1951 Him Pra 25 (28) (Pt B) (Pr 16).

——S. 497 — Non-applicant committing adultery in houses situated near applicants' houses and threatening applicants — Proceedings under Section 107 at instance of applicants are competent — Section 199 does not apply. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 107. 1963 (2) Cr LJ 621: AIR 1963 J and K 56.

——S. 497 — Living in adultery — Meaning of — 'Living in adultery' has in matrimonial cases a different and wide meaning than in Section 497 I. P. C. and Section 488, Cr. P. Code. In marital cases 'adultery' takes its fullest dictionary meaning and means nothing else than the sexual relations unfollowed by a marriage or legal union. For that a woman may not be the wife of anybody. She may be the mistress of the adulterer. See Hindu Marriage Act (1955), S. 13 (1) (i). AIR 1965 Madh Pra 268 (DB).

2. Validity of Section.

●——S. 497 — Validity — Discrimination solely on ground of sex — (Constitution of India, Articles 14, 15).

Sex is a sound classification and although there can be no discrimination in general on that ground, the Constitution itself provides for special provisions in the case of women and children by Cl. (3) of Art. 15. Articles 14 and 15 thus read together validate the last sentence of Section 497, Indian Penal Code, which prohibits the woman from being punished as an abettor of the offence of adultery. AIR 1951 Bom 470, Affirmed. Yusuf Abdul Aziz v. State of Bombay, 1954 SCJ 385: (1954) 1 MLJ 618: 67 MLW 610: 1954 Cr LJ 886: 1954 SCR 930: 1954 SCA 398: 56 PLR 190: 56 Bom LR 1179: AIR 1954 SC 321 (322) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 497 — Validity — If void as contravening Arts. 14 and 15 of the Constitution.

Section 497, I. P. Code, does not contravene any of the fundamental rights laid down in the Constitution and cannot therefore be held to be bad or void under Article 13 of the Constitution. It cannot be said that Section 497 does not operate equally upon all persons as required by Article 14, in that women are absolved from any punishment under the section. Nor can it be said that the section offends against Article 15 (1) in that in enacting the section the Legislature discriminated in favour of women and against men on the ground of sex. There is no such contravention. But assuming it to be such the alleged discrimination in favour of women is saved by Article 15 (3). ILR (1952) Bom 449: 1952 Cri LJ 23: 21 Bom Cr Cas 229: 53 Bom LR 736: AIR 1951 Bom 470 (471) (Pt A) (Pr 2) (DB).

●——S. 497—Divorce Act (1869), Ss. 10, 7 — Adultery by husband — Woman with whom adultery is committed need not be a married woman. See Divorce Act (1869), S. 10. AIR 1959 Cal 451 (SB).

4. Consent or connivance of husband.

——S. 497 — For offence under S. 497, Indian Penal Code complainant should also establish that act was without his consent or connivance — Mere act of adultery is not penal under the section.

Held, that for a conviction under Section 497, Indian Penal Code, it is not enough to establish that the accused had committed adultery with the wife of the complainant. It must further be proved that complainant did not consent to or connive at the adultery. AIR 1953 Mad 422, Foll 1962 MPLJ (Notes) 339.

——S. 497 — Connivance — What constitutes — Negligence by husband.

To constitute 'connivance' something more than mere negligence by the husband is necessary. The Court cannot draw an inference of connivance from the fact that the woman had been abandoned by her husband. 29 Cut LT 482: 1963 (1) Cr LJ 312: (1962) 4 Orissa JD 359: ILR (1962) Cut 941: AIR 1963 Orissa 60 (60) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

5. Who can complain.

——S. 497 — Criminal P. Code (1898), S. 199 — Husband abandoning wife — Wife living in the same village with her father — Husband cannot be said to be absent — Father cannot be said to have care of the woman on behalf of her husband — Hence even if offence under S. 497, Penal Code, is proved on evidence against accused he cannot be convicted on basis of complaint by father. See Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 199. 1963 (1) Cri LJ 312: AIR 1963 Orissa 60.

6. Evidence.

——Ss. 497 and 498 — Legal marriage — Proof — Onus — Opinion or evidence of witness — Evidence Act (1872), S. 50.

In order to make out an offence either under Section 497 or S. 498, Penal Code, the prosecution has to prove, not only that the accused had had sexual intercourse with the woman but also that she was and the accused knew or had reason to believe her to be the wife of another. The fact that she was the wife of another is a material element and, it must have been proved as strictly as any other material fact.

The evidence of witnesses which is no better than an opinion, is not sufficient to prove marriage in prosecutions under Ss. 497 and 498. 1951 RD (HC) 32: 1951 All WR (HC) 312.

——S. 497 — Circumstantial evidence — Sufficiency for conviction.

In a prosecution under Section 497, I. P. Code it is very difficult to get actual eye-witnesses of the commission of adultery or sexual intercourse and the Court has to rely upon the circumstances and conduct of the persons concerned.

Where the charge rests mainly on the statement of the woman and the circumstances are that the accused, a young man, has been seen on several occasions in the company of the woman in suspicious circumstances when the husband of the woman was away, the Court can accept the version of the woman as supplemented by other witnesses unless the accused succeeds in proving his denial of having committed the offence. 1961 (2) Cr LJ 459 (460) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (Assam) (DB).

——S. 497 — Charge for commission of adultery — Prosecution must prove marriage. See Penal Code (1860), S. 441. (1961) 2 Guj LR 256.

——Ss. 497, 363, 366, 360, 361, 497, 498 — Prosecution under Sections 363 and 366 — Proof — In a prosecution under Section 363 age of the girl is material point because unless it is shown that she was below 18 years of age at the relevant time, there could be no case of kidnapping within the meaning of Section 363. In a prosecution under Section 497 the question of marriage must be proved strictly — (Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 to 104). 1957 Cri LJ 847: AIR 1957 Him Pra 42.

——Ss. 497, 456 — House trespass with intent to commit adultery — Evidence and proof.

Prosecution must establish ingredients of S. 497 with regard to intended act of sexual intercourse — Prosecution must prove that the woman with whom the accused intended to have sexual intercourse was the married wife of another man and that the accused had knowledge or had reason to believe that she was the wife of another man and that the intended intercourse was without the consent or connivance of her husband. Madh BLR 1955 Cri 318: Madh BLJ 1955 HCR 1515: ILR (1956) Madh B 153: 1956 Cri LJ 231: AIR 1956 Madh Bha 69 (69, 70) (Pr 3).

——S. 497 — Burden of proof.

To sustain a conviction under Section 497 the complainant must not only prove that the accused had sexual intercourse with his wife but also that the act was done without his consent or connivance. 1953 Mad WN 9: 1953 Mad WN (Cri) 1: (1953) 1 MLJ 236: 66 Mad LW 80: 1953 Cr LJ 765: AIR 1953 Mad 422 (423, 424) (Prs 9, 10) (DB).

——S. 497 — Accusation of adultery— Establishment of — Evidence by spouse — Corroboration necessary — Statement of adulteress recorded in Government Maternity Home and Rescue registers can be used for corroboration. See Hindu Marriage Act (1955), S. 10 (1). 1964 (2) Cr LJ 686: AIR 1964 Mys 280 (DB).

——S. 497 — Adultery— Evidence — Wife along with her grown up daughters living in accused's house for long time — No evidence to show occupation of same room by wife and accused — No inference of sexual intercourse can be drawn.

For proving the offence of adultery direct evidence of sexual intercourse is difficult to obtain in the majority of cases but this can be inferred from circumstances relating to the way of life of the man and the woman, such as the fact of their living alone in a bungalow for a considerable length of time or sleeping together on the same bed or at least in the same room. But where all that was established was that the wife of the complainant was living with her two grown up daughters for a long time in the house of the accused and there was no evidence to infer that the man and the woman used to occupy the same room, if not the same bed, no inference of sexual intercourse can be drawn. 1964 (1) Cr LJ 250 (251, 252) (Prs 6, 18) (Patna).

——S. 497 — Adultery — Consent or connivance — Burden of proof — Absence of consent or connivance to be inferred from facts and circumstances of each case — Strict proof not necessary. 1965 (2) Cri LJ 673: 1965 Raj LW 157: ILR (1965) 15 Raj 522: AIR 1955 Raj 191 (193) (Pt B) (Pr 6).

7. Charge.

——S. 497 — Criminal P Code (1898), Ss. 225, 232, 537 — Allegation of sexual intercourse based on mere surmise — Non-framing of charge under Section 497, Penal Code held did not therefore result in miscarriage of justice. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 225. 1952 Cri LJ 258: AIR 1951 Him Pra 25.

——S. 497 — Charge — Essentials — Specification of dates.

In a charge of adultery under Section 497, it is not possible nor indeed necessary to specify the date. It is enough if the charge specifies the dates between which the offence was committed. AIR 1951 Kutch 17 (18) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

Where the husband has lodged a report with the police alleging commission of offences under Sections 366, 368 and 376, I. P. 11. Sentence.

1. Object and scope.

——S. 498 — Applicability — Ranbir Penal Code, S. 498 — Married woman eloping with lover and staying with him of her own free will — Both guilty.

In the State of Kashmir an elopement which was the result of joint adventure by a married woman with a lover would, in view of the addition to Section 498, R. P. C. that in such cases the woman would be guilty as an abettor, certainly come within the mischief of Section 498, R. P. C. If a married woman whose husband is living were to elope with another person, both of them will be guilty under Section 498, R. P. C The fact that the woman with her own free will has chosen to stay with the accused and that she is a free agent to leave him any moment she likes, would make not the slightest difference, since the wife is also liable to be dealt with as an abettor. 1955 Cr LJ 1188: AIR 1955 J and K 18 (20) (Pr 5).

——S. 498 — Object of.

The object of Section 498, Penal Code, is not so much to protect the husband as to inflict punishment on those who interfere with the sacred relation of marriage. 17 Cr LJ 363, Rel. on. 31 Mys LJ 97: 1952 Crl LJ 705: AIR 1952 Mys 34 (36) (Pt D) (Pr 10).

2. Enticing or taking away.

——S. 498 — Taking — Allowing a woman to accompany and keeping her after she had left her father's protection does not constitute. AIR 1951 Kutch 17 (18) (Pt C) (Pr 12).

——S. 498 — There need not be enticement — "Taking away" of another's wife with necessary intention constitutes offence — Meaning of "taking away", explained.

In order that a person should be made liable for an offence under Section 498, it is not necessary that there should be any enticement. All that is required is that if any person "takes away" another man's wife with the intent that she may have illicit intercourse with him, then the offence is completed. There must be some influence operating on the woman, or co-operating with her inclination at the time the final step is taken which causes a severance of the woman from her husband, for the purpose of causing such step to be taken. ——S. 498 — Complainant establishing fact of his previous marriage with the victim girl — Accused a relative of complainant and co-villager presumably knowing about relationship between complainant and victim girl as husband and wife. Accused seen going with her — Love letters written by accused to complainant's wife suggesting his intention to have illicit intercourse with her — Held, conduct of accused and spirit in which letters were written clearly established that he was taking or enticing away the woman with criminal intention of having illicit intercourse with her and as such accused was liable to be convicted under S. 498. 32 Cut LT 5: ILR (1965) Cut 530.

3. Intention.

——S. 498 — Intention — Proof of — Surrounding circumstances — Sufficiency for inference.

For a conviction under Section 498, I. P. Code, the intention of the accused has of course to be made out. But such intention has to be gathered from the surrounding circumstances. The very fact that the accused and the woman have stayed together for a number of days as man and wife in a hotel is sufficient to show criminal intent on the part of the accused. 4. Offence can be committed in respect of married woman only.

——Ss. 498, 363, 366, 360, 361, 497 — Prosecution under Sections 363 and 366 — Proof — In a prosecution under Sections 497 and 498, by the husband the question of marriage of the woman with the complainant is material — (Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 to 104). See Penal Code (1860), S. 363. 1957 Cri LJ 847: AIR 1957 Him Pra 42.

5. Concealment or detention.

——S. 498 — 'Detains' — Wife willingly leaving husband and taking shelter in the house of accused — Accused claiming to have 'married' her — Offence.

The provisions of Section 498, like those of Section 497, are intended to protect the rights of the husband and not those of the wife. The gist of the offence under Section 498 appears to be the deprivation of the husband of his custody and his proper control over his wife with the object of having illicit intercourse with her. The consent of the wife to deprive her husband of his proper control over her would not be material. It is the infringement of the rights of the husband coupled with the intention of illicit intercourse that is the essential ingredient of the offence under Section 498. The policy underlying the provisions of Section 498 may no doubt sound inconsistent with the modern notions of the status of women and of the mutual rights and obligations under marriage. That, however, is a question of policy with which courts are not concerned.

It is true that the word 'detains' may denote detention of a person against his or her will; but in the context of the section it is impossible to give this meaning to the said word. Detention in the context must mean keeping back a wife from her husband or any other person having the care of her on behalf of her husband with the requisite intention. Such keeping back may be by force; but it need not be by force. It can be the result of persuasion, allurement or blandishments which may either have caused the willingness of the woman, or may have encouraged, or co-operated with her initial inclination to leave her husband. It may be that the wife was dissatisfied with her husband and wanted voluntarily to leave her husband; but where the evidence is that she must have been encouraged or induced not to go back to her husband because she knew that she would find ready shelter and protection with the accused, and she must have looked forward to marry him and the accused in fact claimed to have married her there can be no doubt that he intended to have illicit sexual intercourse with her. If having thus left the house of her husband she came to stay with the accused and he allowed her to stay with him, it can be said that he has 'detained' her within the meaning of Section 498. 43 Cal WN 980 and ILR (1939) Lah 148; AIR 1939 Lah 295; 40 Cr LJ 760, Overruled; AIR 1957 Pat 285, Affirmed. ——S. 498 — "Detains" — Interpretation of.

Having regard to the fact that Section 498 deals with one of the offences relating to marriage, the word "detains" in that section means any act of the offender which has the effect of keeping the woman back from her husband. The mere fact of the woman keeping back from her husband would be immaterial unless it can be said to have been brought about by the alleged offender. And whether it has been so brought about must depend on the facts and circumstances of each case.

However, the effect in question will be deemed to have been brought about by the offender when it is his act however insignificant that turns the balance in favour of the woman keeping back from her husband. That being so, however determined may a woman be not to go back to her husband, whether due to ill-treatment, infidelity or any other cause, the offender will be deemed to have detained her if he offers her the facility, e.g., food and shelter, which enables her to keep back from her husband. AIR 1933 Bom 489; AIR 1934 Sind 72; AIR 1938 Pat 432, Rel. on. 1954 Cr LJ 845: AIR 1954 Him Pra 39 (39) (Pt B) (Pr 2).

——S. 498 — Concealment or detention — What constitutes.

In order to constitute detention, there must be evidence to show that the accused did something which had the effect of preventing the woman from returning to her father. Where there is no such evidence, nor is there evidence of any concealment against her will no offence is committed. AIR 1951 Kutch 17 (18) (Pt D) (Pr 12).

——S. 498 — Detention — Meaning of.

Detention means keeping back. This may take place either by physical force, that is to say, the person detained is kept back by physical force or threat, or it may be due to deception practised on the person concerned, or it may be due to inducement or persuasion, that is to say, a rosy picture may be painted before the person concerned and on account of this rosy picture the person concerned remains in the house, or money may be offered by way of inducement, or it may be even an offer to marry. All this and many others may well be inducement or persuasion which would ultimately keep back the individual concerned and so long as that individual is under the influence of that persuasion or inducement and is thus kept back, he must be deemed to be detained. AIR 1938 Pat 432, Foll. AIR 1939 Lah 295, Dissent. from.

Where there is no evidence how the complainant's wife left the house but there is evidence that one of the accused married complainant's wife, this could only have been because he had offered to marry her and she had agreed to marry him. Thus, there was persuasion or inducement by reason of which she remained in the house of the accused. That being so, she was detained within the meaning of that word in Section 498. 1956 BLJR 184: ILR 35 Pat 93: 1957 Cr LJ 653: AIR 1957 Pat 285 (287) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (DB).

——S. 498 — "Detains".

The word "detains" in Section 498 implies some act on the part of the accused by which the woman's movements are restricted; this again implies unwillingness on her part. Mere persuasion by means of blandishments or similar inducements is not included in the word "detention". AIR 1939 Lah 295, Foll. 1958 Cr LJ 1802: AIR 1953 Punj 263 (264) (Pr 1).

6. Complaint.

Held, no cognizance of the offence could be taken without complaint of the husband as required by Section 199, Cr. P. Code and the accused could not be convicted under Section 498, I. P. C. 1961 MPLJ (Notes) 82.

——S. 498 — If during the continuance of a valid marriage a woman has a sexual intercourse with another man that would be illicit intercourse, even though she may have contracted a bigamous marriage with that person. Hence a charge under Section 498 may be added to a charge under Section 494, provided the evidence warrants it. 1950 TCLR 652.

——Ss. 498, 497 — Burden of proof.

In order to make out an offence under Section 497 or Section 498, it must be proved that the accused had sexual intercourse with or enticed a woman "who is and whom he knows or has reason to believe to be the wife of another man". If the accused denies the fact altogether the prosecution is bound to prove both the fact of sexual intercourse and the fact that the accused knew that the woman was the wife of another man. The latter fact must be strictly proved as any other fact. Mere statement by witness that she was the wife of a certain person would not be enough. 1951 All WR (HC) 312.

——S. 498 — Essentials — Detention and intention to have illicit intercourse must be established.

Even if marriage and offender's knowledge of it be taken as proved by the prosecution yet.

unless detention or intention to have illicit intercourse with the woman detained has been established the offender cannot be convicted under S. 498. 1954 Cr LJ 845: AIR 1954 Him Pra 39 39 (Pt A) (Pr 2).

Held, that the Court was not prepared to reject the evidence of the witnesses related to the complainant merely because they were relations. After all it must be remembered that some witnesses had to be examined on the question of marriage and who else could prove the marriage better than the relations of the complainant himself. 1956 BLJR 184: ILR 35 Pat 93: 1957 Cri LJ 653: AIR 1957 Pat 285 (287) (Pt C) (Pr 8) (DB).

9. Consent of woman.

——S. 498 — Essentials — Gist of offence — Taking from the husband — What constitutes — Wife's complicity or willingness — Effect.

Section 498 of the Penal Code is intended to protect the husband and not intended for the benefit of the wife. It cannot be said that in a case where a woman is unwilling to live with her husband, may be even for good reasons, and she comes and lives with another person as husband and wife, the other person should not be held to have taken the wife within the meaning of Section 498 of the Penal Code. The wife's complicity in the transaction is no more material on a charge under this section than it is on a charge of adultery. (1865) 2 MHCR 331. 10. Practice and procedure.

——S. 498 — Scope — Effect of non-compliance — Case registered under Section 498/379, I. P. C. — Magistrate having no jurisdiction to entertain complaint under Section 498 in view of S. 199, Cr. P. C. — Charge under Section 379 could be proceeded with. See Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 199. AIR 1955 NUC (Ajmer) 3828.

Held, that procedure adopted by the Magistrate in having referred the matter to police for investigation after recording the sworn statement should in effect be taken to be under S. 202, Cr. P. C. and not under Ss. 155 and 156.

The complaint which remained on the file and formed the basis for initiating the proceedings satisfied the requirement of Section 199, Cr. P. Code. AIR 1952 Mys 34 (36) (Pt C) (Pr 9).

11. Sentence.

——S. 498 — Sentence — Considerations in awarding — Enhancement of sentence— Woman dissatisfied and of loose character and willing to marry accused — Enhancement of sentence.

Since S. 498 does not purport to protect the rights of woman but safeguards the rights of husbands, in enhancing the sentence consideration that in India, woman whether chaste or unchaste must be protected, is not helpful or decisive when it is clear that the woman was of loose moral character, was dissatisfied with the husband and was willing to marry the accused. In such a case though the accused is guilty under Section 498 it is difficult to accept the view of the High Court that the sentence of two month's simple imprisonment imposed on him by the trial Court was so unduly or manifestly lenient as not to meet the ends of justice. It is not right for the High Court to inerfere with the sentence. Alamgir v. State of Bihar, 1959 Cr LJ 527: AIR 1959 SC 436 (442) (Pt B) (Pr 18).

——S. 498 — Sentence.

Where for an offence under Section 498, the trial Court had imposed a sentence of 2 months' S. I., but the appellate Court reduced it to a fine of Rs. 50.

Held, that even if it be considered that the woman in question was an unchaste one, there could be no ground for people trying to detain other people's wives, and if did so, they must pay the penalty for it. Women in this country, whether chaste or unchaste, must be protected as intended by the Legislature, and it is the duty of the Court to see that they are given sufficient protection. 1. Scope and applicability.

——S. 499 — libel of Court and Contempt of Court — Distinction — S. 499, I. P. C. does not exclude action under Section 2 of Act 12 of 1926 — (Contempt of Courts Act (1926), S. 2).

A libellous reflection upon the conduct of a judge in respect of his judicial duties may certainly come under Section 499, I. P. C., and it may be open to the judge to take steps against the libeller in the ordinary way for vindication of his character and personal dignity as a judge; but such libel may or may not amount to contempt of Court, which is something more than mere defamation and is of a different character. What is made punishable in the Indian Penal Code is the offence of defamation as defamation and not as contempt of court. If the defamation of a subordinate Court amounts to contempt of Court, proceedings can certainly be taken under Section 2 of the Contempt of Courts Act, quite apart from the fact that other remedy may be open to the aggrieved officer under Section 499, I. P. C., ILR 10 Cal 109 and 1893 AC 138, Rel. on. Ramakrishna Reddy v. ——S. 499 — Applicability — Reply sent through lawyer containing defamatory statements — Offence.

One Parvati left her husband's house on account of ill-treatment at the hands of the accused. A registered notice was issued to the accused the husband and his father through lawyer demanding maintenance for her. To this a reply was caused to be sent by the accused through their lawyer denying the maintenance claim on account of Parvathi's unchastity. The reply went further and alleged that her father knew about her immoral conduct and also positively helped her in her immoral ways and that he deceived the accused into entering into the marriage alliance. It was for these allegations made against him that father of Parvati filed the complaint.

Held, that the presumption that so long as the reply of the accused stood proved the accused might be taken to have given instructions therefor was not inevitable seeing that Counsel's volition had intervened and it was unsafe to found criminal liability on the accused on such basis. 1959 Ker LR 453: 1959 Mad LJ (Cr) 274: 1959 Ker LT 451: 1959 Ker LJ 441: 1959 Cr LJ 1321: AIR 1959 Ker 342 (343) (Pr 3).

——Ss. 500, 499 — Defamation — Essential ingredients — Communication of libel to third person is material.

The gist of the offence of defamation lies in the dissemination of the harmful imputation. When a defamatory statement is published, it is not only the publisher, but also the maker, who becomes responsible and it is in that context that the word 'makes' is used in S. 499. It is of the essence that in order to constitute the offence of defamation it must be communicated to a third person because what is intended by the imputation is to arouse the hostility of others. If a person merely writes defamatory words and keeps the writing with himself, the offence is not made out. Likewise, if the libeller merely communicates the libel to the person defamed it does not constitute an offence under the said section although it may amount to an insult and may be punishable as such. The question whether the libel in fact has been communicated to a third person is material. It is not enough that the libeller posted it to a third person. 1962 MPLJ 927: 1962 (2) Cr LJ 760: AIR 1962 Madh Pra 382 (383) (Pr 5) (DB).

plainant paid fine for past transgression — Ex-communication for failure — Offence.

There is nothing objectionable if a Caste Panchayat whose help is sought for by the complainant refuses to decide the dispute unless he himself would be amenable to the caste discipline by paying a fine for his past transgression of the caste rules. His ex-communication for failure to pay the fine may, in some circumstances, amount to an offence under the Penal Code. 26 Cut LT 249: 1961 (1) Cr LJ 296: AIR 1961 Orissa 33 (34) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

——S. 499 — Essentials of offence.

The essence of the offence of defamation, as given in S. 499 is that the imputation must have been made either with the intention of causing harm, or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation would cause harm to a person.

In judging whether the accused had such intention or knowledge, the circumstances under which and the main object with which the application containing the defamatory statements was sent including the prayer asked for from the Minister, and the background of the dispute between the parties before the Endowment Department, should all be considered. If, after a careful consideration of all these facts it did not appear that the accused had the necessary intention or knowledge it was not proper to place him on trial for an offence under S. 500, Penal Code. 25 Cut LT 16: 1959 Cri LJ 1006: AIR 1959 Orissa 141 (143) (Pt B) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Ss. 499 and 500 — Essentials of offence.

By the mere use of words 'dishonest and fraudulent' the accused committed no offence of defamation. For making out an offence of defamation it is necessary that by using certain expressions the intention is to harm the reputation of a certain person or the person using those expressions knew or had reason to believe that such imputation would harm the reputation of such person. 1953 Raj LW 203: AIR 1955 NUC (Raj) 469.

——S. 499 — Publication — Meaning of — It is enough if communication was made to at least one person other than person defamed.

The word 'makes' in S. 499 has been used in its etymological sense as connoting 'to make pubilc' or 'to make known to people in general.' Publication implies communication to at least one person other than the person defamed. 38 Cri LJ 806 (All), Rel. on. Where, therefore, the respondent wrote a letter to the President of Managing Committee of Takhat Harmandirji containing defamatory matter about one of the members of Supervising Committee, with the word 'Personal' appearing on the letter and the President made a note on it and directed the General Secretary to report to him about the affairs of the Gurudwara and the General Secretary put up that letter before the Managing Committee and sent a reply to the President.

Held, that there was 'publication' as contemplated in S. 499 of the Penal Code. The steps which the President and the General Secretary took after the receipt of the letter were not very material, inasmuch as the respondent might not have intended that the letter should be placed before the members of the Managing Committee but even without that there was communication of the deamatory statements to the President. 1965 (2) Cri LJ 693 (Pat).

Held, on a consideration of the article in question that there was no want of due care and caution in the publication of the editorial in question and its publication was made for the public good. It is well settled rule of interpretation that where a matter is of public interest the Court ought not to weigh any comment on it in a fine scale. Some allowance must be made on even intemperate language provided however, that the writer kept himself within the bounds of substantial truth and does not misrepresent or suppress facts. 1959 Cr LJ 1310: AIR 1959 Cal 677 (679) (Pt D) (Pr 7) (DB).

When a letter enclosed in an envelope is posted at any particular place, it cannot amount to publication at the place where the letter is posted. The gist of the offence of defamation being publication of the defamatory matter, if the letter does not reach the other side, it cannot be said that defamation has been completed merely because the letter was posted at a particular place. There must, therefore, be evidence of the publication to constitute defamation and till the letter is published it cannot be said that defamation has been committed. ——S. 499 — Essentials — Ill-will or malice — If necessary.

To bring the publication of a scandalous imputation under the penal law, it is not necessary to prove that it was done out of any ill-will or malice or that the complainant had actually suffered from it. It would be sufficient to show that the accused intended, or knew or had reason to believe, that the imputation made by him would harm the reputation of the complainant. ——S. 499 — Publication of defamatory statement — Publisher's liability.

The accused cannot justify the defamatory statement on the ground that similar reports had appeared or by saying, that rumours to that effect were afloat. ——Ss. 499 and 500 — 'Publish', meaning of.

The use of the word 'publish' in S. 499, I. P. Code, does not contemplate those communications which one is bound to make to others in the normal course of his legal duties. Thus where accused No. 2 in his official capacity as General Manager had placed a report made by accused No. 1 about his subordinate before the Board of Directors who had appointed him and to whose direction and control he was subject, and it was not alleged by the complainant against accused No. 2 that he made any remarks of his own which might be defamatory against the complainant.

——Ss. 499-500 — Degree of care and caution — Newspapers — Position of.

In the matter of defamation the position of newaspapers is not any way different from that of members of the public in general. The responsibility in either case is the same. The degree of care and attention is no way less in the case of newspapers publications than that required from ordinary men. In the case of publication of a defamatory matter actual source of information on which the person accused has acted and the justifiability of his so acting ought to be considered. If he has not taken proper care and acted, on a gossip and the complainant is thereby defamed he ought not to escape consequences on the ground that he has promptly contradicted the incorrect report. The culpability in such cases does not depend on the circumstance whether he has tried to undo the wrong which he has committed or not but upon the fact whether he has acted with care and caution or has done so rashly or negligently. Attempt to undo the mischief may exhibit want of malice or fear of the consequences. But even if it indicates absence of malice that is not enough to prove good faith as defined under the Code. 1958 MPC 199: 1958 Jab LJ 252: 1958 MPLJ 405: 1958 Cri LJ 1036: AIR 1958 Madh Pra 216 (217) (Pt A) (Prs. 10, 11) (DB).

——Ss. 500 and 501 — Publisher himself a printer of a newspaper— Although his case would be covered by S. 501 his liability under S. 500 would not be affected thereby.

As a publisher of a newspaper makes known to the people in general and thus gives publicity to the news item printed in that newspaper, the case against him for the publication of a defamatory news item in the paper would legally and logically amount to defamation simpliciter and, as such he would be punishable under Section 500, Penal Code. If he is also the printer of the newspaper, the case would be covered by S. 501 too of the Penal Code. But his liability as a publisher under S. 500 of the Code, would in no way be affected. While S. 500 provides the penalty for the simple and plain act of defamation, S. 501 provides the punishment which may be imposed upon a person who prints or engraves any matter, knowing or having good reason to believe that it is defamatory of another. The definition of defamation, as given in S. 499 shows that a person publishing any imputation concerning another person intending to harm or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm the reputation of the other person, would be guilty of defaming the other person, unless the case is covered by the Exceptions. In the definition word 'publishes' is obviously used in its etymological sense and connotes 'to make public' or to make known to the people in general. 1966 Cri LJ 292: 67 Pun LR 877: AIR 1966 Punj 93 (95) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

●——S. 499, Expln. 2 — Person includes collection of persons which is identifiable — Prosecution staff of U. P. Government at Aligarh can be subject of defamation and is covered by the explanation.

The language of Explanation 2 to S. 499, I. P. Code is general and any collection of persons would be covered by it. Of course that collection of persons must be identifiable in the sense that one could, with certainly, say that this group of particular people has been defamed, as distinguished from the rest of the community. The prosecuting staff of Aligarh or as a matter of fact, the prosecuting staff in the State of Uttar Pradesh, is certainly such an identifiable group or collection of persons. There is nothing indefinite about it. This group consists of all members of the prosecuting staff in the service of the Government of Uttar Pradesh. Within this general group of Public Prosecutor of U. P. there is again an identifiable group of prosecuting staff, consisting of Public Prosecutors and Assistant Public Prosecutors, at Aligarh. This group of persons would be covered by Explanation 2 and could, therefore, be the subject of defamation. Sahib Singh Mehra v. State of U. ——Ss. 499, Expl. 2 and 11 — Complaint by Corporation for defamation can be maintained — Imputation must cause special injury to property.

Having regard to the provisions of S. 499 read with Explanation 2 and the definition of the word 'person' in S. 11 of the Penal Code it cannot be said that a complaint for defamation is not maintainable at all by a Corporation. But the scope of such a complaint by a Corporation is not the same as that by individuals. A Municipal Board per se has hardly a reputation. If the management is good it will be said that the Board is being run efficiently. But if the management is bad there is bound to be accusation of inefficiency and nepotism, etc. If a person makes any imputation so as to cause any special injury to the property of the board then the Board can maintain a complaint under S. 500. But where the minority party in the Board attacks the majority party for inefficiency then such an attack does not amount to defamation. (Such a case is covered by Exceptions 1 and 2 of S. 499).

The imputation held did not harm reputation of the Board, the intention being to improve the administration. 1952 All WR (HC) 32: 1952 All LJ 64: 1952 Cri LJ 282: 1952 All Cr C 12: AIR 1952 All 114 (115, 116) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 8).

——Ss. 499, 500 — Association of persons — Imputation lowering moral character of members collectively — Publication of, held amounts to defamation.

In respect of an association of persons the law of defamation in India is not the same as the English law of defamation relating to a trading company or corporation.

Defamation of an association or collection of persons could be made by publication of an imputation affecting character or reputation. The contention that only an imputation lowering the credit of the person is the mode in which there can be any defamation of an association, is not correct, and an association may be defamed also by an imputation which lowers the moral character of the members of the association collectively AIR 1935 All 743; 36 Cr LJ 816, Rel. on.

Thus, where in certain newspaper, an item of news was published to the effect that because a certain Student's Welfare Association was hobnobbing with the police, many anti-social persons had obtained shelter and the real culprits were not being punished;

Held, that the publication amounted to defamation of the members of the association. (1962) 66 Cal WN 24: 1961 Cal LJ 53: ILR (1961) 2 Cal 637.

——Ss. 499, 500 — Imputation per se defamatory — Plea of exception — Burden of proof.

The imputation in the accusation, which the accused makes to the caste panchas, that the complainant had taken food with chamars is per se defamatory. The accused if at all can take shelter under the eighth or the ninth exception. To do so the presence of good faith is a necessary prerequisite. Since the accused himself had voluntarily gone to the caste panchas and made the accusation regarding the conduct of the complainant it was for him to prove that what he did was done in good faith. When there is no evidence that he had equipped himself with necessary information on proper grounds that the substance of the accusation was to his belief correct it cannot be said that he had acted as a reasonable and prudent man and therefore, with good faith in making the accusation. There can be no good faith when the accused can leave no reasonable ground to believe the truth of the statement he makes. 76 IC 393, Rel. on. 1958 MPLJ 248.

——S. 499 — Bank whether can be defamed.

Dicta— An imputation against a company or an association or collection of persons as such amounts to defamation. Therefore, the mere fact that the reputation of a Bank is sought to be affected by the publication does not take it away from the mischief of a defamatory publication. AIR 1950 Pat 545 (546) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

——S. 500 — Defamation — Imputation concerning any person — Identity of such person should be established.

If the words complained of contain no reflection on a particular individual or individuals, but may equally apply to others belonging to the same class an action for defamation will not lie. The defamatory matter to be actionable must be such that it contains an imputation concerning some particular person or persons whose identity can be established. It is unnecessary that the person whose conduct is called in question should be described by name. It is sufficient if on the evidence it can be shown that the imputation was directed towards a particular person or persons who can be identified. AIR 1922 Pat 101; 78 ER

4. "Intending to harm or knowing or having reason to believe that it will harm reputation".

——S. 499 — Intention.

Section 499 requires inter alia an intention on the part of the accused to harm the reputation of the complainant or the knowledge that the imputation made by him will harm such reputation. 1952 All WR (HC) 32: 1952 All LJ 64: 1952 Cri LJ 282: 1952 All Cr C 12: AIR 1952 All 114 (115) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

——S. 499 — "Intending to harm or knowing" — Matter published per se defamatory.

In the case of news item published in a newspaper forming the subject of a proceeding under S. 500, where the matter published is per se defamatory, the only thing that the prosecution is called upon to prove in the first instance is the fact of the publication itself. When the tenor of the document shows that the publication tends to harm the reputation of any person, a Court would be justified in gathering from the terms of matter itself that the publishers intended to harm or knew or had reason to believe that such imputation would harm his reputation. AIR 1950 Pat 545 (546) (Pt C) (Pr 5).

5. Explanation 4 — "Harming reputation".

——S. 499, Expln. (4) — Defamation — What constitutes — Held use of word 'dalal' might indirectly lower moral and intellectual character.

Section 499, Expln. (4) seems to imply that what constitutes defamation has to be determined not upon an interpretation that may be found for a word by a laborious research in a Court of law but upon the meaning that might be conveyed by the word to a reasonable and fairminded man. A meaning that might be conveyed to a morbid or suspicious mind cannot be taken into account for this purpose. The word "others" in the explanation refers to a reasonable and fair minded man and not to a man with a morbid or suspicious mind. (1880) 56 PD 514; (1913) AC 386 and (1897) AC 68, Consd.

Held on considering circumstances that though the word "dalal" may have an innocent meaning the context in which it was used in the present case it might indirectly lower the moral and intellectual character of the complainant in the estimation of others by imputing to him a personal or pecuniary motive in attempting to get the Tales from Arabian Nights selected as a Rapid Reader of English for the year 1955. ILR (1957) 2 Cal 181.

——S. 499, Explanation 4, Exceptions 1, 3 and 9 — Applicability considered. AIR 1055 NUC (Madh Bha) 3695.

——S. 500 — Applicability — Intention — Words of scurrilous abuse or admonition or conveying disapproval of particular conduct — Offence.

The mere use of the word "chandal" cannot form the foundation of a charge or prosecution for defamation. It may amount at best to a form of scurrilous abuse and cannot be interpreted as conveying any imputation against the reputation of the person in respect of whom the word is used. The reputation of a person is certainly not affected by his being called a "chandal", and intention to cause loss of reputation which is the essential ingredient of the offence of defamation cannot be attributed to a person who indulges in abuse in a fit of excitement. The accused using the word "chandal" cannot be said to have the intention or motive to damage the reputation of the person who is so called so as to bring case within S. 500, I. P. Code. Further where the words uttered sound more in the nature of admonition, rather than purport to lower the reputation of the complainant cannot amount to defamation. So also words meant to convey disapproval of the conduct of the complainant cannot amount to defamation, as being intended to lower his reputation. 1952 Cr LJ 1640: 18 Cut LT 146: AIR 1952 Orissa 351 (352) (Pt B) (Prs 5, 6).

——S. 499 — Harming reputation — Proof of actual harm not necessary if words are prima facie defamatory — Explanation 4 does not apply in such a case.

Explanation 4 to S. 499 would not apply when the words used and forming the subject-matter of the charge are per se defamatory.

It is not necessary to prove that actually harm was caused if the words are prima facie defamatory and it would be sufficient if it can be made out that the maker of the statement knew or had reason to believe that the imputation made by him would harm the reputation of the person against whom the imputation is made. When the expressions and words used in a particular letter or other document are clear enough to indicate that there would be a harm to the reputation, then one need not find out as to whether the imputation was likely to lower the moral or intellectual character of the person defamed. 1965 (2) Cri LJ 693 (Pat).

6. Exception 1 — Imputation of truth for public good.

——S. 499, First and Second Exceptions — Defamation by publication of news item in newspaper about Lekhpal — Doctrine of fair comment —Its application to journalist — Held imputations made about Lekhpal were justified.

Exception 1 to S. 499, Penal Code, allows imputation which is true concerning a person if it be for the public good. If the imputation is contained in news item published in a newspaper then the doctrine of fair comment comes into play. The doctrine of fair comment is based on the hypothesis that the publication in question is one which broadly speaking, is true in fact, and is not made to satisfy a personal vendetta; and further that the facts stated therein are such as would go to serve the public interest.

A journalist possessed no higher right than an ordinary citizen has in respect of the freedom of speech. At the same time, by virtue of the special character of his profession the journalist owes certain duties to the public, the most important of which is the dissemination of news and views fully and truly expressed on matters affecting the public good. A newspaper editor, acts within his legitimate sphere when he offers criticism of what he considers and bona fide believes to be for the good of the community. But he is not protected if under the garb of criticism he employs language calculated to defame or degrade the character of a public servant or a private citizen. In order to pass the test of fair comment the publication must be free from malice and made bona fide and in public interest. Mere exaggeration or inaccuracy in matters of details does not make a comment unfair so long as what is expressed there is materially true and for public benefit.

Held, that on the facts of this case the imputations contained in the news item published in the newspaper about Lekhpal could not be considered defamatory of the complainant Lekhpal as the imputations were justified. AIR 1917 Bom 62 (SB), Rel. on. 1965 (2) Cri LJ 334: AIR 1965 All 439 (441) (Pt B) (Prs 15, 16, 18) (DB).

——S. 499, Exceptions 1, 3 and 9, S. 500 — Privilege — Good faith — Burden of proof — Newspaper article published in amidst controversy imputing corrupt and dishonest character to complainant without any basis — Article couched in wild and unrestrained language — Absence of good faith — Editor held guilty of defamation.

Before the benefit of any of the Exceptions 1, 3 and 9 of S. 499 can be given to an accused, there should be some basis for holding that the accused acted in good faith. The onus of showing that he had reasonable ground for believing the defamatory imputation to be true and was actuated in publishing such a statement not by malicious reasons but by an intelligent zeal for the public interest lies on the person who publishes such an imputation. Unless there is some substantial foundation for an imputation it cannot by any stretch of language be called a 'fair comment' which was made in 'good faith'. While logical infallibility is not required, the circumstances should, show that the maker or the publisher of the defamatory imputation exercised due care and caution. There is no warrant either in law or equity to hold that the Exceptions to S. 499 are to be interpreted in a different manner in the case of a journalist.

Held, on facts that the imputations were per se defamatory, lacked in good faith and were clearly malicious. (1863) 32 LJQB 185, Applied. 1962 (1) Cr LJ 122 (124, 125) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 8, 9, 14) (All).

To say something of a person which holds him to contempt is defamatory. If what is said is true then that is a defence of justification under the exception. Code (1898), S. 342 — Words and Phrases — Public interest.

By virtue of Section 105 of the Evidence Act the Court is bound to presume the absence of circumstances which would bring the offence within any of the special exceptions contained in Section 499, I. P. Code and the burden would primarily rest on the accused to show that the exception applies. Burden cast on the accused in a criminal case by virtue of Section 105 of the Evidence Act is not so onerous as the primary burden cast on the prosecution to prove the offence beyond reasonable doubt: (1962) 2 SCJ 347; 1962 Mad LJ (Cr) 531; 1962 (1) Cr LJ 521: AIR 1962 SC 605, Rel. on. If a fact is to be held 'proved' the Court must either believe it to exist or consider its existence so probable that a prudent man ought under the circumstances of the particular case to act upon the supposition that it did exist. If on the evidence it appears probable that the defence set up is true he is entitled to a decision in his favour even though he may not have succeeded in proving the truth of his version beyond reasonable doubt. 1943 KB 607 and (1957) 3 WLR 330, Rel. on. The statement of the accused made under Section 342 of Cr. P. Code also may be considered in deciding whether the onus has been discharged by the accused. 1962 (2) Cr LJ 284; AIR 1962 SC 1204, Rel. on.

To come within the exception, the imputation should not only be proved to be true, but it must also be proved that it was for the public good that it was published. No amount of truth will justify a libel unless its publication was for the public good. AIR 1950 Cal 339, Rel. on.

Held, in the instant case that the publication was made in public interest or public good and as the allegations made about the manager were proved to be true the pamphlet was saved by Exception 1 to Section 499. Held, further, that there was no excessive publication to take the case out of the Exception. 1965 (1) Cri LJ 699: 1963 Ker LJ 1209: 1963 Ker LT 845: AIR 1965 Ker 161 (163 to 165) (Pt A) (Prs 6 to 8, 11 to 13).

——S. 499, Exception 1 — Imputation of truth for public good — Truth as defence must extend to entire libel and not part only.

Exception 1 to Section 499, Penal Code, recognizes the publication of truth as a sufficient justification if it is made for the public good. When truth is set up as a defence it must extend to the entire libel and it is not sufficient that only a part of the libel is proved to be true. 1965 Mad LJ (Cri) 834: 1964 Ker LJ 422: ILR (1964) 2 Ker 31: 1964 (2) Cr LJ 549: AIR 1964 Ker 277 (282) (Pt C) (Pr 11).

7. Exception 2 — Opinion regarding public conduct of public servant.

——S. 499, Exception (2) — Essentials of exceptions — Statement made in good faith — What is — Member of Board of Secondary Education described as 'dalal' of a publisher — There was reasonable inference warranted by facts — Accused rendering valuable public service and acting in good faith — Hence acquitted of charge under Section 500. See Penal Code (1860), S. 52. ILR (1957) 2 Cal 181.

——S. 499, Exceptions 2, 3 and 9 — Fair comment — Defence of — Nature of.

A mere perusal of Exceptions 2, 3 and 9 is sufficient to show that these Exceptions which embody the defence compendiously known as 'fair comment', apply only to expressions of opinion or imputations on character, and not to assertions of fact. The latter can be justified only by truth. Comment must be on actual and not on imagined conduct; and even if the accused person genuinely believed the imputed conduct to be real that would be no defence. If the opinion or the imputation purports to be based on facts, then the person claiming the benefit of these Exceptions must prove those facts. It is not enough for him to say that he believed those facts. When the allegations of fact are in themselves defamatory and those allegations are not proved to be true no defence on fair comment can possibly arise. For 'fair comment' cannot justify a defamatory statement which is untrue in fact. A comment cannot be fair which is built upon facts which are not truly stated. 1958 Ker LT 1158: ILR (1959) Ker 195: 1958 Ker LJ 1262: 1959 All WR (Sup) 29: 1959 All Cri R 158: (1959) MLJ (Cri) 930: 1959 Cri LJ 464: AIR 1959 Ker 100 (103) (Pt D) (Pr 12) (DB).

——S. 499, Exceptions 2 and 3 — Fair comment — Editor of newspaper stating facts and drawing fair inferences — Comment in public interest without malice — Effect — Onus.

Actually, a newspaper writer should be more cautious than a private individual as his utterances are very widely published. The first and the foremost requirement is that the facts should be substantially true.

The next test is that the comments should be fair in the sense that they are inspired by genuine desire on the part of the writer to serve the public interest, and not by any intention of wrecking private spite.

The third criterion is that the criticism even if called for by the facts, should be in public interest, and should not be malicious. In determining the question of good faith, the Court should take into account the intellectual capacity of the accused and the surrounding facts.

The burden is on the accused to show that a statement that is prima facie defamatory is justified under Exception 2 or 3. But he can discharge the burden by pointing out the circumstances.

Held, that the offending editorial imputing regional bias in the matter of granting successive extensions to an officer and his contemplated appointment as I. G. P. was per se defamatory of the Minister in charge of the department but. the act of the accused fell within the ambit 'fair comment' and was thus saved by the Second and Third Exceptions to Section 499. 1961 MPC 61: 1961 MPLJ 329: 1961 1961 Jab LJ 577: 1961 (2) Cr LJ 114: AIR 1961 Madh Pra 205 (208 to 215) (Prs 15, 22, 28, 31, 32, 35) (DB).

——S. 499, Exceptions 2 and 9 — Fair comment — Good faith.

The fact that the accused is a journalist does not make any difference, for the simple reason that the press have no special privileges and are in no better position than any other man. They have rather greater responsibilities and should be more cautious in making scandalous imputations. Their high position and status and the method of publication at their disposal are apt to do more harm than if the imputation was made or published by an ordinary individual. because some sanctity is generally attached to what is published in a newspaper. The defence of fair comment only protects statements of opinion; it does not extend to defamatory allegation of facts. It is one thing to comment upon or criticise, even with severity, the acknowledged or proved facts of a public servant and another to assert that he has been guilty of particular acts of misconduct or misappropriation. One of the essential conditions for the application of either of the Exceptions 2 and 9 is that the accused should have acted in good faith. For that he has to establish that he acted in the exercise of due care and attention. In considering whether the privilege contemplated by the exceptions was exercised with due care and attention the Court has also to look, among other things, at the mode of publication which is adopted and to see whether it indicates a conscious and criminal disregard of the complainant's legal right and vitiates the privilege. 1952 Cri LJ 1553: AIR 1952 Pepsu 165 (168) (Pt E) (Pr 6).

8. Exception 4 — Publication of reports of proceedings of Court.

——S. 499, Fourth Exception — Applicability — Conditions.

Under the Fourth Exception to Section 499, I. P. C., it is not necessary that the proceedings of a Court of justice should be published contemporaneously. All that is required is that the publication should be a substantially true report. It need not be true absolutely word for word but taking the whole thing it must be a substantially true account. Good faith has not been made an ingredient in the exception. 56 CWN 705: 54 Cr LJ 1168: AIR 1953 Cal 503 (504) (Prs 5, 6).

9. Exception 7 — Censure by person in authority.

——Ss. 499, Exceptions 7 and 9 and 500 — Applicability — Caste community — Right to decide questions relating to usages of caste and to take decisions about conduct of members — Ex-Headman of community failing to hand over properties to newly appointed officers and to comply with demands made by community and Headman to hand over — Members assembling at meeting and deciding not to invite Ex-Headman to any functions in houses of members or to attend functions in his house till dispute was settled — If amounts to defamation of Ex-Headman.

There is no doubt that in the changing social order where individual liberty is recognised as pre-eminent right, decisions taken on the basis of custom, usage and religious or caste sentiments have to be appreciated in terms of the changing times. But this does not mean that where an individual has done something wrong or prejudicial to the interest of the community, the members of his community which, by virtue of custom or usage, is competent to deal with such matters, cannot take a decision by common consent; and so long as such decision does not offend the law, it can be enforced by the will of the community.

Where the complainant the Headman of a community, who had tendered his resignation as Headman failed to hand over the properties to the newly appointed Headman or the community but claimed to manage them as hereditary trustee and did not comply with the demands made by the newly appointed Headman and the community to hand over the same the members of the community of which the complainant was a member assembled at a meeting and finding that the conduct of the complainant in not making over the properties to the newly appointed president, vice-president, or members of the community was reprehensible and by a unanimous decision the members of the community resolved not to attend the functions held in his house and not to invite him for functions held in the houses of the community members, till the dispute was over, and where the language of the resolution which was entered in the minutes book did not prima facie indicate that any social ostracism amounting to ex-communication had been intended.

Held, the manner in which the decision was taken showed that the president and vice-president had no individual part in it, and malice in law could not be attributed to them and the language of the resolution could not be construed as defamatory, and the president and vice-president could not therefore be held guilty of any offence under Section 500 of the Indian Penal Code. ILR (1964) 2 Mad 416: (1964) MLJ (Cr) 597: (1964) 2 MLJ 433: 77 Mad LW 179: 1965 (1) Cr LJ 390 (392) (Prs 11, 12).

10. Exception 8 — Statement to person in lawful authority.

● ——S. 499, Exceptions 8 and 9 — Punjab Gram Panchayat Act, 1952, S. 42 — Scope and effect.

In order to establish a defence under Exception 8 to Section 499 of the Penal Code (45 of 1860), the accused must prove that the person to whom the complaint was made had lawful authority over the person complained against in respect of the subject-matter of the accusation. Likewise under Exception 9 to Section 499 of the Penal Code, besides the bona fides of the person making the imputation, the person to whom the imputation is conveyed must have a common interest with the person making it which is served by the communication. In the instant case, the communication cannot be said to satisfy the test stated above. Further under S. 42 of the Punjab Gram Panchayat Act, 1952, the complaint was excluded from the jurisdiction of the Panchayat since the appellant was a public servant. Thus the appellant was properly convicted of the offence. Kanwal Lal v. ——Ss. 499, Exception 8 and 500 — Good faith — False accusation — If excepted.

Under Exception 8 to Section 499 it is not defamation to prefer in good faith an accusation against any person to any of those who have lawful authority over him with respect to the subject-matter of the accusation. Once the accusation is found to be false, it follows that it was not made in good faith. ——S. 499, Exception 8 — Defamatory statement by witness — Evidence Act (1872), S. 132, Proviso — Distinction.

The distinction between the eighth exception to Section 499, Penal Code, and the proviso to Section 132, Evidence Act is that the former excludes a statement from the definition of defamation altogether, whereas the latter excludes prosecution for defamation and bars proof of the accusation in a trial for defamation. The proviso to Section 132, Evidence Act assumes that the accusation contained in the answer is punishable as defamation under Section 500. Consequently, in order to consider whether the proviso is applicable or not, it is irrelevant to consider whether the answer contains defamation punishable under Section 500 or not. The proviso will apply even though the statement is not made in good faith and hence is not covered by Exception 8 to Section 499, Penal Code. 1960 Cr LJ 1285: 1960 All LJ 668: 1960 All WR (HC) 543: 1960 All Cr R 345: ILR (1960) 1 All 649: AIR 1960 All 606 (608) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 499, Exceptions 8 and 9, S. 500 — Applicability and scope — Good faith — Determination of.

On complaint by a Government employee, that certain allegations made against him in the petitions sent by the accused to the Collector and other officers were defamatory, the Magistrate found that though the allegations were defamatory in character and they were duly published he was not liable to be punished as the terms of Exception 9 to Section 499, Penal Code, were duly satisfied. On appeal against the acquittal,

Held, (i) that the terms of Exception 9 were not complied with; for, it could not be held that the imputation was for the protection of his own interest or for the public good;

(ii) that as the accused believed in the truth of allegations which were made by him on the information supplied by others, and it was not proved by the prosecution that the accusations were made in bad faith, i.e., not with due care and attention, the accused was protected by Exception 8 to S. 499;

(iii) that as the Magistrate acquitted the accused holding that he acted in good faith it was not proper to interfere with his conclusion, in an appeal under Section 417, Cr. P. ——S. 499, Excep. 8 — Applicability — Proof.

It is quite clear from the wording of Exception 8 to Section 499, I. P. Code, that an accused person is not bound to prove that the allegations made by him are true. It is sufficient if he proves that on reasonable grounds he believed the allegations to be true and in that belief he made the accusation to the lawful authority mentioned in the Exception. 4 C 124, Rel. on. 1952 Cr LJ 611: AIR 1952 Cal 228 (229) (Pr 4).

——S. 499, Exception 8 — 'Lawful authority' — Public accusation by newspaper not lawful authority contemplated by Excep. 8 — Excessive publication — Privilege conferred by Excep. 8 cannot be availed of.

In order to establish a defence under Exception 8 to Section 499, the accused would have to prove that the person to whom the complaint was made had lawful authority over the person complained against in respect of the subject-matter of the accusation. Accusation before the public by publication in a newspaper is not the sort of lawful authority contemplated by the Exception.

Therefore, where an accused felt some suspicion about a society from the audit report and thought that the publication was necessary in that case and had made some embellishments, additions, etc., in the article probably to meet the taste of the public and to attract their pointed attention to the main facts so as to make it an interesting readable matter:

——Ss. 499 and 500 — Panchas deciding in their meeting to report to authorities against complainants — Report containing defamatory statements — Statements made in good faith — Right to protection under.

Applicants were Panchas of the village. They received reports with allegations of misbehaviour by the non-applicants. After a meeting they passed a resolution and sent a copy of the resolution to the authorities for taking such action as was thought necessary. On the basis of the report investigations were made and it was found that the report was not true. The imputations made by the applicants were defamatory and were admitted by them. They were convicted under S. 500, I. P. Code.

Held, that it was not a case of the complainant that the accused had made defamatory statements in the public. For the purpose of bringing in exceptions 8 and 9 of S. 499, I. P. Code it was not necessary that the accused must have established that there was no malice. If from the facts and circumstances of the case, it could be reasonably presumed that the accused might have made the statement in good faith, they were entitled to the benefit of Exceptions 8 and 9. Since a witness answering questions under the Section 161, Criminal P. C. is not bound to state truly, nor can he be prosecuted for refusal to answer, there is no privilege; at any rate, the privilege is not absolute. In order to appreciate the plea of privilege it is necessary for the Judge to come to definite findings as to the questions put to the accused and the answers by each of them. The judge has also to find whether these answers were given in good faith and whether the Sub-Inspector had lawful authority over the accused or any of them with respect to the subject-matter of the accusation. If the questions put by the Sub-Inspector were not relevant to the investigation he was making, the question of privilege would not arise. Such statements fall within the 8th Exception of Section 499, I. P. Code, and the accused can claim privilege only if he can bring them within the purview of that Exception. That exception says that accusations preferred in good faith against a person to any of those who have lawful authority over that person with respect to the subject matter of accusations will not amount to defamation. ——S. 499, Exception 9 — Imputation for protection of interest or for public good.

In order to come within Exception 9 an accused person is not bound to prove that the imputation made by him is true. It is sufficient for him to prove that he made it in good faith for the protection of the interest of any person or for the public good. If he proves that on reasonable grounds be believed the imputation to be true and in that belief he 'bona fide' made it, he will be protected.

A stranger to the case standing by the side of the accused giving instructions to a counsel would well raise a genuine suspicion in the mind of Sub-Inspector who was directly concerned with the prosecution of that case that the stranger was to all intents and purposes acting as a 'Dalal' or a tout for the accused and if he drew the attention of the Magistrate that the stranger was standing in the Court-room and said that the was a "dalal," the imputation would be a 'bona fide' one made with a view to ensue a fair trial and with a view to the stopping of the undesirable interference with the case and would be protected under Exception 9. 1956 Cr LJ 470: AIR 1956 All 267 (268) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

——S. 499, Exception 9 — Imputation by person for protection of his interest or for public good — Good faith — Proof of — Funds of Society — Accounts not maintained — Reasonable grounds for making defamatory allegation against office-bearer.

An accused person is entitled to the protection under Exception 9 if the imputations, though subsequently found to be baseless and incorrect are made by him in good faith and for the public good. Mere good faith can be negatived on the ground of recklessness indicative of want of due care and attention. Good faith is relative to a great extent, and must be determined by the circumstances under which the imputation was made, the social status and level of education of the person making the imputations.

Where the imputation contained in a handbill was aimed at protecting the members of certain community from giving subscriptions to a person, who holding a responsible office, in the organisation, neither maintained the accounts, nor cared to supervise them nor even knew whether they were maintained or were destroyed, the imputation was covered by the Exception.

Every communication is privileged if it is made for the public good and it is for the public good that the society should be safe from being deprived of their money if no accounts are maintained of the funds to which they contribute. In such a case the accused in order to prove his bona fides has only to show that there was reasonable ground for bringing the allegations he made. 1962 MPLJ 995: 1963 (1) Cr LJ 186: (1963) Jab LJ 887: AIR 1963 Madh Pra 60 (61) (Pr 2) (DB).

——S. 500, Excep. 9 to S. 499— Accused charging complainant on information received and believed to be true — Accused cannot be said to have acted without due care — Imputation covered by Exception 9 to S. 499.

Held, on facts that it was not contemplated that simply because an accused did not prove that what he published was true, a conviction under Section 500, Indian Penal Code as a matter of course had to follow. It was true that it was for an accused to bring his case within any of the Exception to Section 499. All that he had to establish was that there was a reasonable ground for him to make a communication that he made and that he acted in good faith, that is, after due care and attention. The boys were not found by the Magistrate to be truthful. But whether they were telling the truth or not was not the point. What was relevant for the purposes of the case under Section 500, Indian Penal Code was whether the accused Tedi had reasonable grounds for entertaining the suspicion disclosed in his application. The state in which the dead body was found and what those two boy companions of the deceased were giving out, would afford reasonable basis to Tedi for his suspicion against the complainant. If Tedi made reference in his application to the suspicions with a view that detailed and proper enquiry should be made, he could not be said to have acted without due care and attention. 1962 MPLJ (Notes) 257.

——Ss. 499 and 500 — Applicability — Accusation in village panchayat — Offence.

In villages Panchayats are held for taking decisions affecting communal matters. Conviction under Section 500 cannot be based on a statement before a Panchayat. 1958 MPLJ (Notes) 159.

——S. 499, Exception 9 — Applicability — Duty of accused to exercise care in publication.

In the case of publication of a defamatory matter actual source of information on which the person accused has acted and the justifiability of his so acting ought to be considered. If he has not taken proper care, and acted on a gossip and the complainant is thereby defamed, he ought not to escape consequences on the ground that he has promptly contradicted the incorrect report. The culpability in such cases does not depend upon the circumstance whether he has tried to undo the wrong which he has committed or not, but upon the fact whether he has acted with care and attention or has done so rashly or negligently. In the matter of defamation, the position of 'newspapers' is not in any way different from that of members of the public in general. The responsibility in either case is the same. The degree of care and attention is in no way less in the case of newspaper publications than that required from ordinary men. It is no defence for the accused to say that he has acted on the information given to him by another. It is for him to establish that the source on which he acted was the proper source on which he is entitled to act and he did so with care and circumspection. When a suspected murder case was under investigation, advanced publication of news against the complainant with bold head-lines can hardly be said to be for public good. 41 IA 149, Foll. (1957) MPLJ 407: 1957 MPC 401: 1957 Jab LJ 698: 1957 Cr LJ 1143: AIR 1957 Madh Pra 162 (164, 165) (Pt B) (Prs 26, 27, 29, 31).

Where an individual has done something wrong or prejudicial to the interests of his community, the members of his community, which, by virtue of custom or usage is competent to deal with such matters, it does not mean, cannot take a decision by common consent, and so long as such decision does not offend law, it can be enforced by the will of the community.

The complainant, who had tendered his resignation of the office of the head-man of the Padmasaliva Community refused to hand over the trust properties belonging to the Community to the accused who were appointed head-man and vice head-man respectively of the community. Thereupon, the members of the community, of which the complainant was a member, assembled at a meeting and on the complainant again refusing to hand over the properties to the new office-bearers, arrived at a decision that the conduct of the complainant was reprehensible and by a unanimous decision resolved not to attend the functions held at the complainant's house and not to invite him for functions held in their houses. The complainant filed a complaint under Section 500 against the accused. It was found that the language of the resolution could not of itself be considered to be defamatory.

Held, that (1) the manner in which the decision was taken clearly showed that the accused had no individual part in it and malice in law could not be attributed to them. (2) The case came within the Exception 9 to Section 499 and the accused could not be held guilty of any offence under S. 500. (1964) 2 Mad LJ 433: 77 Mad LW 179: ILR (1964) 2 Mad 416: 1964 Mad LJ (Cr) 597: 1965 (1) Cr LJ 390 (392) (Prs 11, 12) (Mad).

——S. 499, Exception 9 — Applicability — Husband alleging unchastity against wife when pronouncing talak — Effect — Muhammedan Law — Marriage — Dissolution).

Under Exception 9 to Section 499, I. P. Code, it is not defamation to make an imputation on the character of another, provided that the imputation be made in good faith for the protection of the interest of the person making it or for the public good.

Where a Muhammedan husband makes allegations of unchastity against his wife when pronouncing the talak it cannot be said that the allegations are made by him for protection of his interest because under the Muhammedan Law no reason need be given for pronouncing the talak. His case therefore does not fall within Exception 9 so as to protect him from a charge of defamation against him by the wife. 1957 Mad WN 275: (1957) Mad LJ (Cri) 149: AIR 1957 Mad 339 (340) (Pt A) (Prs 3, 4).

——S. 499, Ninth Exception — Scope of privilege.

The Ninth Exception to Section 499, I. P. Code affords protection when a defamatory statement is made in good faith for the protection of the interests of the person making it. The exception covers not only such allegations of fact as could be proved true but also expressions of opinion and personal inferences. 11 Cr LJ 588 (Sind), Ref. to.

But in order to come within this exception the imputation must have been made or published by the accused (a) relevantly, (b) for the protection of his interest and (c) in good faith. 15 Bom 351; AIR 1929 Cal 346, Ref.

In good faith, an essential ingredient is honesty of purpose. The accused must firstly, honestly believe his imputation to be true, and, secondly, he must honestly make it from a sense of duty to himself. He must not exaggerate or say unnecessary things. He must not make his duty the cover for spreading the libel. The question for enquiry in such cases will be whether the accused had reasonable grounds for believing the imputations to be true and for believing that it was necessary for his safety to give publicity to them.

Of course in determining whether the accused should or should not have placed implicit reliance on the credibility of his source of information courts should not naturally insist upon exacting standards but should take into account the mental attitude of the person, his prejudices and predilections and the surroundings in which he was placed. These indicate the scope of the privilege of an accused or party in making or publishing through his lawyer or by himself —it makes no difference whatsoever—per se defamatory imputations.

In other words, the privilege conferred upon an accused or party under the Ninth Exception to Section 499, I. P. Code, is a qualified privilege and is not an absolute privilege as under the Common Law of England. On grounds of public policy attempts were made now and then by judges with strong predilections for engrafting English Common Law on purely Indian problems but it is now settled law that the Court cannot engraft in Exceptions to Section 499, I. P. Code the doctrine derived from the common law of England or based on public policy. 1954 Cr LJ 1239: AIR 1954 Mad 741 (748) (Pt C) (Prs 15, 16).

——S. 499, Exception 9— Case by A against B — Transfer application by B — Application containing allegation against C, friend of A and Magistrate — Allegation held was covered by Exception 9.

In a case filed by A against B, B made an application for transfer, his case being that C on account of his influence which was secured in undesirable ways, was using it against B by securing witnesses against him and that he (C) was very friendly not only with A but with the Magistrate and was using this friendship to the detriment of B. It was also stated that C being rowdy and considered to be a bad element he (B) apprehended that he would not have a fair and impartial trial. On the perusal of the Police record the High Court found that the description of C amounted to his being rowdy.

Held, that it could not be said that the allegation was not made for the protection of the interest of B. The reputation of C bore out clearly the truth that B had made the allegation in good faith. ——Ss. 499, Exceptions 9 and 10 and 500 — 'Good faith' — Person ex-communicated for some social offence — Members of his caste reporting fact to prominent members of caste — Offence.

It is true that the Constitution does not recognize caste but social customs have not changed notwithstanding the provisions of the Constitution and if a person, in good faith, publishes any letter containing defamatory matter in the interests of the other members of his caste, he cannot be held guilty of defamation.

Where a person is ex-communicated for some social offence by members of his own caste the Mukhias of his village are in duty bound to report this fact to the other prominent members of their caste in the interest of all of them. Under these circumstances their good faith is apparent and both the 9th and 10th Exceptions to S. 499, I. P. Code would apply. In some cases even if the allegations against the person ex-communicated are not found to be true yet the good faith of the persons disseminating such allegations may be inferred if there are reasonable grounds for those persons to believe, after due care and attention, that the allegations were true. All that the 9th and 10th Exceptions to Section 499, I. P. Code require is that there should be good faith, i.e., the imputation must have been made after due care and attention even though on further searching investigation it may not be found to be true. 24 Cut LT 417: 1958 Cr LJ 1426: AIR 1958 Orissa 259 (259, 260) (Prs 6, 7).

——S. 499, Exception 9 — Printer and publisher can invoke the exception if the allegations are made in good faith and for public good — AIR 1965 SC 97, Rel. on.

Even if the allegations made by the newspaper are factually not correct the editor, printer and publisher of the newspaper would be protected if the allegations are made in good faith and for public good. Both these conditions, of good faith and for public good, have to be fulfilled before the benefit of Ninth Exception can be invoked. The definition of 'good faith' as given in S. 52 of the Code is at variance with the definition of 'good faith' under the General Clauses Act. According to the latter definition 'a thing shall be deemed to be done in good faith where it is in fact done honestly whether it is done negligently or not.' But for the purpose of Exceptions to Section 499, the definition of 'good faith' as given in Section 52 of the Penal Code would prevail as against the one given in the General Clauses Act. 67 Pun LR 877: 1966 Cri LJ 292: AIR 1966 Punj 93 (97, 98) (Pt C) (Prs 12, 14).

——S. 499, Ninth Exception — 'Good faith' — Implication of — Conduct of accused during trial — Relevancy.

In the context of the law of defamation the requirement of good faith, in publishing an article derogatory to the character of the complainant, is not satisfied, by merely showing a belief on the part of the publisher in the truth of the publication.

A publisher of a defamatory statement can only be protected if he shows that he had taken all reasonable precautions and then had a reasonable and well-grounded belief in the truth of the statement. The plea of 'good faith' implies the making of a genuine effort to reach the truth, and a mere belief in the truth without there being reasonable grounds for such a plea, is not synonymous with good faith. (1899) 3 LRA 532, Rel. on.

The conduct of the accused during the course of the proceedings in a Court, is a relevant factor in determining his good faith; and if there are several imputations, good faith or truth must be proved with respect to every imputation, and, if he fails in substantiating truth or good faith in respect of any one imputation conviction must stand. AIR 1914 PC 116, Discussed and Rel. on. 1961 (1) Cr LJ 710: 63 Pun LR 794: AIR 1961 Punj 215 (223, 224) (Pt D) (Prs 38, 39, 43).

——S. 499, Exception 9 — Applicability.

Reliance upon rumours, even if widely current, is no defence to a charge of a criminal libel not being protected by Exception 9. The accused can only succeed on producing proof of the truth of the matter charged, as libellous, and not by leading evidence as to his own belief in its truth. If an information is shown to have been obtained from a supposedly reliable source and thereafter it is subjected to a reasonable investigation, a belief in its truth will mitigate the guilt. In order to earn complete imunity all the ingredients of the Ninth exception have to be substantiated before a libeller can be suffered to injure the complainant's good name. 1961 (1) Cr LJ 710: 63 Punj LR 794: AIR 1961 Punj 215 (226) (Pt G) (Pr 54).

11 (A). Judicial proceedings — Privilege of counsel.

——S. 499, Ninth Exception — Scope — Privilege of counsel to put defamatory questions to witness to protect client's interest.

The liability of an advocate charged with defamation in respect of words spoken or written in the performance of his professional duty depends on the provisions of S. 499, Penal Code; the Court will presume good faith unless there is cogent proof to the contrary. AIR 1926 Pat 499; AIR 1927 Cal 823; AIR 1927 Mad 379; 52 MLJ 269, Ref. to.

The privilege is not absolute but qualified, but the burden is cast upon the prosecution to prove absence of good faith.

There is no basis for the doctrine that the Legislature in enacting the Indian Penal Code, intended to leave untouched the provisions of the English Common Law on the question of defamation. This section is meant to be universal in its application. Consequently, for purposes of fixing criminal liability, the English Law of Absolute Privilege does not apply in this country to statements of advocates in judicial proceedings. 10 Mad 28 (FB); 36 Mad 216; AIR 1922 Pat 104, Held not good law.

When a complaint is made against an Advocate or Legal Practitioner for defamation in respect of a statement made in the course of a judicial proceeding, it is the duty of the Court to presume that the statement was made on instruction and in good faith and for the protection of his client's interest, and that unless circumstances clearly show that the statement complained of as defamatory was made wantonly or from malicious or private motive, the complaint should not be entered. AIR 1927 Cal 823; AIR 1927 Mad 379; 52 MLJ 269; AIR 1925 Rang 345, Rel. on.

Even the presence of malice will not override the presumption of good faith, when the statement was obviously necessary in the interest of the client, and where the lawyer could not omit to make it without gravely imperilling the interest of his client, and would in fact not be discharging his duty to his client unless he made it. Under Exception 9 it is not defamation to make an imputation on the character of a witness in good faith, and for the protection of the client. It is the duty of the Court, when a complaint is filed against an advocate, ordinarily to presume that the remarks or questions objected to were made on instructions and in good faith. There may be circumstances showing that the remark was made, or the question put, wantonly, or from malice or private motive, but the greatest care should be taken to enquire into the circumstances and an opportunity should be given to the Advocate to offer an explanation before summons is issued.

At the same time while Advocates have their privileges, they have also responsibilities, and they ought not to abuse their privileges. An Advocate should exercise his own discretion before putting an offensive question. A pleader must use a certain amount of common-sense and caution in asking defamatory questions to witnesses. If he puts defamatory question to a witness with utter recklessness and without seeking whether there is any truth in them with a view to injure the reputation of the witness publicly rather than for the proper conduct of his case, he acts in bad faith and is not entitled to claim privilege. 1954 Cr LJ 1239: AIR 1954 Mad 741 (749) (Pt D) (Pr 17).

——S. 499, Exception 9 — Judicial proceeding — Privilege of counsel — (Legal Practitioner).

A member of the Bar in India has no absolute privilege; the liability of an Advocate charged with defamation in respect of words spoken or written in the performance of his professional duties depends not on the common law of England but on the provisions of the statutory enactment in S. 499, Penal Code.

However, there is always a presumption in favour of an Advocate of his having acted in good faith and under instructions for defamatory statements uttered or written by him and that no Court should take cognizance of a complaint in such a case against an Advocate. But this is subject to the other condition that there should be no allegation of malice or improper motive on the part of the Advocate in having made the defamatory statements imputed to him. Cr. ——Ss. 499 and 500 — Defamatory statement by witness in Court — No absolute privilege — Evidence Act (1872), S. 132, Proviso — Extent of privilege which can be claimed by witness — 'Compelled to answer' — Meaning of.

As the Indian Law of defamation unlike the English law on the subject, has been completely codified in S. 499, I. P. Code and the exceptions have been enacted in the section itself, it is really not proper to go beyond them and to invoke the principles of the English law. A person giving evidence in a Court of law is not entitled to an absolute privilege in respect of the statement which he makes and consequently, he is not immune from a complaint of defamation by reason of words uttered on oath in the witness-box. AIR 1937 Nag 138, Rel. on. The proper course for the witness is to ask the Court if he was bound to answer, and if the Court still insisted, there would be compulsion attracting the proviso to S. 132, Evidence Act. But if the witness goes on without showing the least hesitation or asking the Court to excuse him, then on facts, there is no compulsion.

Where, in answer to a question put to the defendant while under cross-examination in a civil suit the defendant told that he knew the plaintiff as being the nephew of one who had become insolvent and had come to stay with plaintiff, such statement cannot in any manner be considered to be either one concerning the subject-matter of the judicial proceeding or one made under compulsion and the defendant would not be entitled to the protection under the proviso to S. 132, Evidence Act and would be guilty under S. 500, I. P. Code, unless he can bring his case within one of the exceptions to S. 499, I. P. Code. 1961 Jab LJ 1454: 1962 MPLJ 305: 1962 (2) Cr LJ 193: AIR 1962 Madh Pra 241 (242, 243) (Prs 3, 4, 5, 7) (DB).

——S. 499 — Defamatory statement by witness whether privileged.

Witnesses cannot be sued in Civil Courts for damages for defamation in respect of evidence given by them on oath in a judicial proceeding but the question of absolute privilege to a witness does not arise in a criminal prosecution in view of S. 499, Penal Code. 36 Mad 216, held overruled by AIR 1926 Mad 906 (FB). 1950 Mad WN 878: 1950 Mad WN (Cri) 282: 52 Cri LJ 1270: 64 Mad LW 1040: ILR (1951) Mad 661: 1950-2 MLJ 686: AIR 1951 Mad 34 (38, 39) (Pt B) (Prs 8, 10) (FB).

——Ss. 499 and 500 — Scope — Privilege of witness.

A witness cannot be prosecuted for defamation in respect of statements made by him when giving evidence in a judicial proceeding. This protection is not available to a complainant who deliberately makes a defamatory statement without the slightest justification. If a man is not allowed to speak out the truth in a Court of law under a penalty of being exposed to prosecution under S. 500 the administration of justice would indeed become impossible and it would be hampered to such a great extent that nobody would be prepared to come forward to depose to facts of which he has knowledge. 12. Exception 10 — Caution for good of person to whom conveyed or for public good.

——S. 499, Excepts. 9 and 10 — Scope — Communication made true and to warn another caste fellow — Good faith — Presence of another person of different caste — Relevancy.

The fact that a person of different caste also happened to be present when a caste fellow was socially mixing with the complainant (an outcaste) would not negative the inference of good faith to be drawn from the facts established. If the communication alleging that the complainant was an outcaste is made to persons of a different caste, who are socially mixing with the outcaste, then it would not be in good faith. 1961 MPLJ (Notes) 62.

●——S. 499, Except. 9 — Evidence and proof — Evidence Act (1872), S. 105 — Charge of defamation — Accused taking exception to charge under Except. 9 — Degree of proof that has to be offered by accused.

There is consensus of judicial opinion in favour of the view that where the burden of an issue lies upon the accused he is not required to discharge that burden by leading evidence to prove his case beyond a reasonable doubt. This however, is the test prescribed while deciding whether the prosecution has discharged its onus of proving the guilt of the accused. It is not a test which can be applied to an accused person who seeks to prove substantially his claim that his case falls under an Exception. Where he is called upon to prove that his case falls under an Exception. law treats the onus as discharged if he succeeds in proving a preponderance of probability. As soon as the preponderance of probability is established the burden shifts to the prosecution which still has to discharge its original onus. Basically, the original onus never shifts and the prosecution has at all stages of the case, to prove the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt. (1935) AC 462, Rel. on. Where an accused person pleads an Exception he must justify his plea, but the degree and character of proof which he is excepted to furnish in support of the plea cannot be equated with the degree and character of proof excepted from the prosecution which is required to prove its case. The onus on the accused may well be compared to the onus on a party in civil proceedings; just as in civil proceedings the Court which tries an issue makes its decision by adopting the test of probabilities so must a criminal Court hold the plea made by the accused proved, if a preponderance of probability is established by the evidence led by him. ——S. 499 — Essentials — Facts to be proved.

It is not enough to sustain a conviction under S. 499, Penal Code to prove that the alleged imputation was made. It must also be proved that it was made with the intention of harming or with the knowledge or reason to believe that it would harm the reputation of the person defamed (i.e.) the complainant. 1951 All WR (HC) 257.

——Ss. 499 and 500 — Evidence of general repute of person defamed — Evidence showing that complaint was not bona fide — Relevance — Duty of Court — Evidence Act (1872), S. 54.

One of the main ingredients of the offence of defamation as defined in S. 499, is that the imputation must have been made with the intention of harming, or with the knowledge or reason to believe that it would harm the reputation of the person concerning whom it is made. While the complainant is entitled to lead evidence to prove this ingredient, the accused is entitled to produce evidence, or put questions in cross-examination of the complainant or his witnesses, to rebut it. In so doing, however, he cannot lead evidence of or put questions relating to rumours and suspicions to the same effect as the defamatory matter complained of, or particular facts tending to show the general character and disposition of the complainant. That being so, an important duty rests upon the trial Court to see, on the one hand, that the accused is not prejudiced in any manner by shutting out evidence, which he is entitled to produce, or disallowing questions, which he is entitled to put; and, on the other hand, that the complainant, who complains of defamation, is not unnecessarily harassed.

In a criminal prosecution for defamation, the accused is entitled to rebut the complainant's case that the alleged imputation was likely to harm his reputation. He can do that by showing that the complainant's reputation was, in view of certain acts of omission or commission, already at a low ebb. He is also entitled to show that the complaint was not bona fide.

Hence, the questions put to the complainant with that object in cross-examination cannot be disallowed on the ground that they are likely to defame the complainant further. 51 Cri LJ 964: 1950 All WR 481: 1950 All Cri Cas 158: 1950 All LJ 787: AIR 1950 All 455 (456 to 458) (Prs 2, 7, 12).
